County to look at phone service option

Level365 connects phones, computers through app

By BAILEY CLINE The Commercial Review

County officials are considering a change in phone service for county depart-

Jay County Commissioners OK'd Aaron Shaff of Level365 to do an analysis on the county's system during a meeting Monday.

Level365 started as a private company out of Indianapolis in 2009. It offers unified communications, or a cloud program, to connect office phones, computers and cell phones through a common app. It services eight Indiana counties, including Benton, Howard and Miami counties. Shaff highlighted a few of the company's features, which include call forwarding and voicemail-to-email

Answering a question from Jay County prosecutor Wes Schemenaur, Shaff confirmed the company could offer on-site training.

He requested permission to evaluate the county's current system in order to accommodate its needs. Jay County currently pays about $600 a month for phone and internet services and utilizes Allstar Communications and Community Fiber Solutions. Shaff confirmed once started, the new program could begin operating within 30 days.

Commissioners gave Shaff the OK to do an analysis of the county's current system.

Considering carts

Dunkirk City Council discussed golf cart rules Monday, with Christy Curts saying she's seen carts being illegally driven on Indiana 167 — state law does not allow golf carts on state or U.S. highways — while others expressed concern about children younger than 16 being behind the wheel. (A driver's license is required to operate a golf cart on a city street.) Council members then discussed the possibility of adding a golf cart registration fee via city ordinance.

UPS, union reach a deal

By KELLY YAMANOUCHI

The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

Tribune News Service Sandy Springs-based UPS and the International Brotherhood of Teamsters have reached a deal on a new labor contract to avert a massive strike. The two sides announced the tentative agreement for a new five-year contract Monday, just a week before the union's strike deadline.

The Teamsters union said the new contract deal comes with higher wages, more full-time jobs and workplace protections. "Rank-and-file ŪPS Teamsters sacrificed everything to get this country through a pandemic and enabled UPS to reap record-setting profits," said Teamsters General President Sean O'Brien said in a written statement. "UPS has put $30 billion in new money on the table as a direct result of these negotiations.'

UPS CEO Carol Tomé issued a statement saying "Together we reached a win-win-win agreement on the issues that are important to Teamsters leadership, our employees and to UPS and our customers.'

ness strong," Tomé said. The Teamsters labor contract extends through July 31, and the union had threatened to strike Aug. 1 if it did not have a new contract agreement by that time.

Teamsters General Secretary-Treasurer Fred Zuckerman said in a written statement that UPS "came dangerously close" to a strike, "but we kept firm on our demands.'

The Teamsters have more than 340,000 members at UPS, making it the largest private collective bargaining agreement in North America. A strike would have crippled shipping across the country, affect millions of deliveries a day and damage UPS's reputation with customers.

The next step is for the union's "This agreement continues to 176 local leaders to meet July 31 ment. If the recommend it for a ratification vote, UPS rank-and-

O'Brien has worked to maintain unity among members on the UPS negotiations, after years past in which the Teamsters had divided into factions.

The Teamsters union had previously announced tentative agreements on a number of terms during negotiations that started in April, including equipping new trucks with air conditioning, ending a two-tier pay system, stopping required overtime on a day they aren't scheduled to work and establishing Martin Luther King Jr. Day as a full holiday.

Last month, the union's members voted to authorize a strike in the event that negotiations fail to reach an agreement. Union leaders then ratcheted up pressure in the negotiations, pushing for faster progress in the talks.

UPS has been losing some business to competitors, including FedEx, as customers worried about how they would move their goods if there is a strike.

Continued from page 1 Schemenaur noted that he compiled information regarding golf cart ordinances in surrounding municipalities when Portland City Council was considering the issue. (He also serves as Portland's city attorney.) He agreed to send that information to Redkey Town Council members to allow them to study their options prior to the next council meeting.

Also Monday, Dunkirk Mayor Jack Robbins reported that work on a flood mitigation project is expected to begin soon.

He said the work will begin with sewer lines on 2nd, Palace and Broad streets as well as Rick Drive. The major part of the $1 million project involves creating detention basins east of Broad Street near Moore Avenue and west of 3rd Street near the southern city limits.

As part of that discussion, Bivens suggested council consider an amendment to it city ordinance to address repairing streets when they are cut for utility work. He said he has looked at other communities that have requirements for completely repaying a street if multiple cuts are made within a single block.

The idea is in response to gas line replacements that have been completed this year with more expected in 2024.

Council asked Schemenaur to look into the issue.

In other business, council: •Received a copy of the ordinance to increase water and sewage rates by 3%. Schemenaur said plans are to hold the public hearing on the ordinance at the Aug. 14 meeting. If approved, the increases will go into effect Jan. 1.

Proposal seeks expansion

By MATTHEW GRIFFIN

Bloomberg News Tribune News Service

The White House proposed a set of rules on Tuesday to improve insurance coverage for mental-health conditions, part of a broader plan to fight rising rates of anxiety, depression and other ailments.

The rules would make it harder for insurers to skirt a federal law that requires them to offer the same type of coverage for mental-health issues as for physical ones. The proposals would also expand the reach of the law to state and local government health plans, a change that the White House estimates would affect about 90,000 workers. Mental-health disorder rates spiked ization, and a recent survey found that an "unprecedented" wave of psychological and substance-abuse issues was overwhelming U.S. cities. Yet a 2021 study showed fewer than half of U.S. adults with a mental illness got treatment, which the White House partly blamed on poor insurance coverage.

"No one should have to drain their savings or go into debt to get help for themselves or their loved ones," Neera Tanden, White House domestic-policy adviser, said on a call with reporters.

The proposals clarify requirements under the Mental Health Parity and Addiction Equity Act, a law passed in 2008 and amended in 2020. They call for insurers to study the outcomes of their coverage rules to ensure people have equal access to mental and physical-

Back in the Saddle

You always remember your names, forgive me. It has been hard to keep track.)

Peoples had been founded by my great-grandfather, and my dad was on the board of directors at the time. So at times I felt I was auditioning for a career in the banking business.

I failed the audition, but at any rate, they decided to give me a taste of everything that summer.

I was stationed in the last teller cage, based upon the assumption that I would have less customer contact there and would be less likely to screw things up.

Every morning, it was my chore to go down to the basement picked up by Haynes, who solved to the mobile home he was living and open the night deposit safe, bring the deposits up and record them. On that, I did OK.

On other chores, not so much. Bank president Haynes Starbuck hated to see tellers idle, so he always added extra tasks to be handled between customers.

One Friday afternoon I was handed a couple of Cratchitt-sized ledgers looked as if they dated from Ebeneezer Scrooge. I was told to balance the accounts, and I worked mightily at it for hours.

But no matter how hard I tried or how many times I tried, I couldn't get the books to balance. Haynes would walk by now and then, seeing the endless spool of adding machine tape accumulating around me, and shake his head.

I never did get the things balanced. At the end of a long and humiliating day, the books were my math and calculator errors within a matter of a few min-

I think he knew at that point that I wasn't suited for life as a

But if he had any doubt it came later that summer when I helped repossess a burned out GTO.

Ī'm sure I've written about this before. (At my age, I've written about just about everything before.)

The short version is that the late great Ron Culy and I set out to repo a Pontiac GTO — a very hot car back in 1967 — that was in the possession of a guy who lived between Portland and Dunkirk.

We caught up with him in the parking lot of Indiana Glass Co., where he was trying to get hired. Ron — with regrets and some courtesy and sympathy — took possession of the car.

in and waited for Ron to show up. He never did.

The car caught fire on its way out of Dunkirk and burned to a crisp before any firemen could make it to the scene.

The good news, Ron kept telling me on the way back to the bank, was that it was covered by the bank's insurance. Looking back, I think he was talking to himself more than to me.

After all, he was the one who had to go in and tell Haynes what had happened.

As for me, though I tried a few months working part-time at a bank in Richmond, my financial career never came together.

Sometimes, though, I have to wonder what might have happened if I'd been able to get those books to balance and that GTO had stayed intact.

Maybe there was a career in I took the former owner back there somewhere after all.

Supreme Court got this one right

By KIM DODSON Indiana Capital Chronicle indianacapitalchronicle.com

There are many conversations taking place about recent rulings by the Supreme Court of the United States (SCOTUS) and how those decisions impact the lives of millions of people. But in a surprising vote, not predicted by many legal experts, the nation's highest court ruled in favor of Medicaid recipients in a case involving Indiana's own Health and Hospital Corporation of Marion County (HHC).

The decision brought a monumental win to vulnerable people throughout the country and solidified the principle that a private right of action is critical for people who rely on safety net programs, including Medicaid.

First, a little background. On Nov. 8, 2022, HHC v. Talevski was heard by the U.S. Supreme Court. A ruling in favor of HHC would have stripped away the legal rights and protections vulnerable citizens, including those who rely on Medicaid services. HHC operates 78 nursing homes throughout the state of decision of a lower court. regarding the brought by the family of a former HHC nursing home resident, Gorgi Talevski.

The stunner was that HHC didn't just ask the U.S. Supreme Court to reconsider whether Talevski's family can bring a lawsuit, they argued that no one should be able to challenge civil rights violations from providers of safety net programs, period!

This from a public entity, receiving millions in state and federal funds, whose mission is to "promote and protect the health of everyone in the community and provide healthcare to those who are underserved." This, from an organization that states their values include community, leadership, excellence, accountability and respect. I find this appalling.

Can you imagine service providers not being held accountable for the quality of care they provide in their facilities and people having no retribution when they have been abused, neglected or exploited? The implications of this case would have reached far beyond Talevski's case and cle is an independent, non-HHC's nursing homes.

Safety net programs -

Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program, the Children's Health Insurance Program, and Temporary Assistance to Needy Families — have been a lifeline for millions. A negative ruling would have left them without any legal recourse if they faced mistreatment, abuse or have benefits illegally taken away or denied. This happens more often than you think.

Private lawsuits filed by recipients of these critical programs have been one of the only ways people can have their right to services enforced. This decision ensures that services providers can be held accountable, which has a direct impact on the quality of services and supports millions rely on.

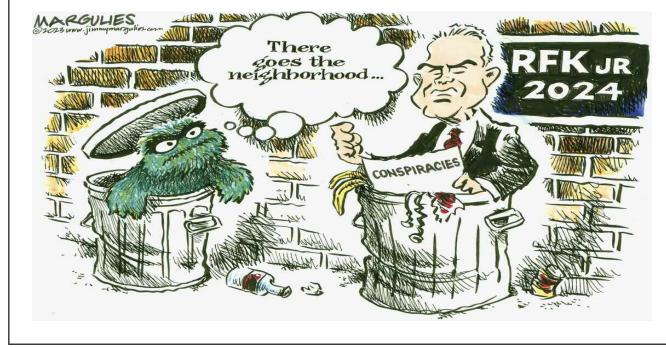

We need providers, policymakers, and community leaders to embrace this decision and recognize the Indiana. They appealed the pivotal role safety net programs play in promoting lawsuit health equity, community integration, and the wellbeing of people throughout the country.

I will admit that I have become a realist rather than an optimist. I chalk that up to a lifetime of having high expectations followed by disappointment. I prepare for the worst and create a Plan B and Plan C. I was prepared for the worst in this case and was ready to band together with advocates to protect the rights of those receiving safety net services.

I am very thankful that SCOTUS got this decision right. I hope that HHC learned a valuable lesson and decides going forward to not only provide the best of care to those who entrust them with their lives, but also take this time to reflect on their vision and mission. We need providers who seek transparency and accountability, not less oversight. HHC must and should do better.

Hoping has not helped climate

Los Angeles Times Tribune News Service

One of the most demoralizing things about the world's response to the climate crisis is the fossil fuel industry's continued success in blocking the pollution-cutting actions that are in the interest of all of humanity.

The solution to our predicament couldn't be clearer: We need to stop burning fossil fuels and pumping pollution into the atmosphere. So much needless human suffering and ecological destruction could be avoided if oil, coal and gas companies saw the existential threat their business model poses and moved quickly to transition into selling safer, less expensive and more reliable renewable energy.

Too many powerful people in government, business and civic organizations have clung to the fantasy that some of the most powerful and destructive companies in history would eventually face reality and transform on their own initiative into clean and sustainable opera-

But the last year has shown they are committed to profiting from pollution. While major oil companies post record profits, they are retreating on their climate pledges, lobbying to reverse climate policies and trying to derail the switch to electric vehicles. In California, the industry is spending tens of millions in an attempt to overturn health protections against drilling near homes and schools while misinforming the public about the high gas prices and their huge windfalls.

It should be obvious by now that fossil fuel companies have no real plans to change in response to the climate crisis. And that the only way forward is without them.

Some high-profile environmental leaders have come to a similar conclusion recently, among them influential climate negotiator Christiana Figueres, under whose tenure as executive secretary of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change the landmark 2015 Paris agreement was developed. She wrote in Al Jazeera earlier this the same actors whose dangerous, sustainable economy right now.

Guest Editorial

month that after years of holding out hope that oil and gas companies would wake up and participate in the decarbonization of the economy, their actions over the last 12 months have changed her mind.

Former Vice President Al Gore, a longtime champion for ciimate action, has also been speaking with refreshing frankness about fossil fuel industry obstruction, decrying 'anti-climate plotting" by companies that refuse to disclose their emissions or commit to phasing them out while they successfully push government policies to slow down the transition to clean energy.

It's a little late for powerful voices from older generations to come to the realization that fossil fuel companies aren't operating in good faith and will fight climate action until the bitter end. But it's welcome nonetheless, and there's clear generational shift in that direction that offers some hope. Polling last year by the Pew Research Center found that while most Americans are reluctant to ditch fossil fuels, younger adults are much more supportive of phasing out oil, gas and coal entirely.

As much as renewable energy like wind and solar has grown globally, we still get more than 80% of our energy from burning fossil fuels. Global greenhouse gas emissions have rebounded, climbing to new all-time highs after a brief downturn during the COVID-19 pandemic. The amount of heat-trapping carbon dioxide in the atmosphere continues its unrelenting rise, and is now 50% higher than in pre-industrial times.

The more we experience the horrors of climate-fueled extremes, from destructive storms and wildfires to deadly and debilitating smoke and heat waves, the clearer it ought to be that we cannot trust in unhealthy and unsustainable products are responsible for more than a century of unabated dumping of greenhouse gas pollution into the atmosphere. It would be delusional to expect the companies that profit from the continued extraction and burning of hydrocarbons. If only it were that easy, right? But politicians, who are often financially beholden to these planet-wrecking system, including moving on from industries, have wasted decades with denial, delay tactics or outright hostility to anything more than incremental steps. It's alarming to see the extent to which fossil fuel industries have captured institutions responsible for slowing climate change. This year's United Nations climate summit in Dubai is being hosted by an oil executive, which is like the climate equivalent of letting arms dealers hold peace talks. Instead of propping up and legitimizing fossil fuel companies, we ought to be stigmatizing them as morally repugnant for continuing to add fuel to a house that's on fire.

That's one reason California lawmakers need to pass legislation to divest California's two big pension funds, CalPERS and CalSTRS, from the biggest fossil fuel companies. The bill is dead for this year, but it may be revived in 2024.

The pension funds' leaders oppose the bill, arguing that it's better to stay invested in companies such as Exxon Mobil, Chevron and Shell because it allows them to use their power as shareholders to push them to be more environmentally responsible. But there's little evidence that strategy has delivered results.

Remaining frenemies with fossil fuel companies in the naive hope they will see the light on climate change is a losing proposition for humanity. It's good that more people are starting to recognize that, though it will take political leadership to kick the recalcitrant fossil fuel industry to the curb and build a

The rationale of good defense

♣A Q The bidding: North East Pass Pass

Opening lead — king of diamonds.

Assume you're defending against a suit contract and have the A-10-x of trump. Declarer, on your right, holds the K-Q-J-x-x. In the normal course of events, you'd expect to get only one trump trick, since your ten would eventually fall under one of declarer's honors

But if one of declarer's honors had to be used prematurely for some purpose other than drawing trump — for example, to overruff your partner's nine of trump your ten would become an additional trump trick.

The opportunity to promote a trump trick for yourself, or for your partner, occurs far more often than diamond after East plays the 7-5 to indicate a doubleton. Declarer ruffs with dummy's jack, and if East overruffs with the king, South has

But if East, instead of overruff-ing the jack at trick three, discards a spade or a club, declarer sooner or later loses two trump tricks and goes down one. East's nine of trump becomes the straw that

East thus has absolutely nothing to lose by discarding and might even gain a trick by not overruff-no trouble making the contract. He wins the spade return, cashes the A-Q of trump and disposes of his spade loser on dummy's clubs.

breaks the camel's back.

There is no good reason for East to overruff the jack of trump; his king is a sure trick that cannot get away. On top of that, there is a per-suasive reason for East to discard at trick three since it is possible for his partner to have the singleton or doubleton ten of trump.

Continued from page 8 During the race's third and final stage, Larson gambled on pit strategy. Pitting on Lap 120, the No. 5 car took two tires and fuel. Mired back around 16th place, Larson waited for the drivers ahead of him to pit. On Lap 144, Larson's patience paid off when he claimed the lead again.

"We got spun early and the car wasn't the same after that," Larson said. "(The team) played the strategy really well to get us up there.

Larson was in command of the top spot when Alex Bowman spun out on Lap 150. With seven laps to on the restart, with Denny Ham- tain his earlier pace.

lin in second place. The Joe Gibbs Racing driver followed Larson's pit strategy and also got two tires.

With the race at stake, the battle for the lead turned fierce. Hamlin drifted up the track and ran Larson into the wall in Turn 1. Larson fell back to fourth.

Larson wasn't happy with Hamlin. After Justin Haley hit the wall and brought out the 10th caution, Larson pulled up alongside Hamlin and hit his door, showing his displeasure with the driver of the No. 11 Toyota.

When the race went back to green, Larson restarted third. But the driver dropped like a rock go, Larson led the field to green through the field, unable to main-race, his seventh at Pocono and a track record. After leading twice for 24 laps, Larson finished a disappointing 20th, far from the glory of Victory Lane.

"First off, just really proud of my team. They did get us in position to race for a win," Larson

The hard racing with Hamlin prevented Larson from getting his third win of the season. Larson said he was angry.

"I've been cost a lot of good finishes by him throughout my career," Larson said.

Larson and Hamlin are friends off the track. However, Larson said Sunday's incident would

"At this point I think I have to," Larson said. "... I've never had to apologize to him about anything, anything I've done on the racetrack. I can count four or five times where he's had to reach out to me, 'Oh, man, I'm sorry I put you in a bad spot there.' Eventually, like he says, you have to start racing people a certain way to get the respect back.

"I haven't done that to Denny. so I don't think I deserve to be run into before I ever got to the wall," Larson said. "So, just it is what it Hamlin went on to win the cause him to race Hamlin differ- road courses and called me and said sorry. I said, 'I'm going to stand my ground next time," Hamlin said.

He felt he raced Larson with respect.

"If I'm going to give anyone the respect, it's Kyle Larson just because I respect him as a race car driver, and I think he's probably the best," Hamlin said. "Certainly he's got my respect. But. damn, I mean, we're all racing for a win. I guarantee you, roles reversed, it goes the same way."

After Pocono, Larson is tied with Kevin Harvick for seventh place in the Cup Series points standings, 110 points behind leader Martin Truex Jr.

Lions host free agent QB for a visit

By JUSTIN ROGERS

The Detroit News Tribune News Service

ALLEN PARK, Mich. — In the spirit of competition, the Detroit Lions continue to explore ways to improve their roster at all positions, including quarterback. On Monday, the Lions continued to look closely at veteran Teddy Bridgewater, hosting him for a visit at the team's facility, according to the league's official trans-April, ESPN reported the Lions had extended a contract offer to the 2014 first-round draft pick who started five games as an injury replacement for Tua Tagovailoa in Miami last season.

Bridgewater, who began his career in Minnesota, spent four years with the Vikings before stops in New Orleans, Carolina, Denver and Miami. In eight seasons, he's made 65 starts, he's son. With a year of experience

This isn't the first time the completed 66.4% of his passes for sides have been connected. In 75 touchdowns and 47 interceptions, for a 90.5 passer rating. He missed the entire 2016 season after suffering a gruesome noncontact injury during an offseason practice that nearly ended his career.

Jared entrenched as Detroit's starter and he's backed up by Nate Sudfeld, who joined the team just ahead of the start of the 2022 seawith the franchise under his belt, Sudfeld has looked like an adequate backup option for the Lions.

"We like Nate," Lions coach Dan Campbell said Monday morning. "...That's the starting point," Campbell said. "And now we get him another year here, we're in camp, let's see where he goes. I thought by the end of spring, he was doing some really good things, so we're excited to have him back.'

Larson's rebound cut short

By REBECCA KIVAK

The Times-Tribune (Pennsylvania) Tribune News Service

LONG POND Larson had a topsy-turvy day Sunday at Pocono Race-

The Hendrick Motorsports driver bounced back after an early calamity, putting himself in position to win his first NASCAR Cup Series race at the track. But an aggressive battle with Denny Hamlin marked the end of Larson's good fortune, leaving him frustrat-

Larson started third in Sunday's HighPoint.com 400. During the race's second stage, the driver of the No. 5 Chevrolet was running second on Lap 47 when Christopher Bell ran into the back of him. The Hendrick Motorsports driver spun out in Turn 1, bringing out the day's fifth caution.

The spin set back Larson, who was consistently running in the top five. However, the 2021 Cup Series champion was undeterred, working his way through the field.

Taking advantage of green flag pit stops, Larson piloted his way into the top 10 by Lap 80.

After leader Ty Gibbs pitted two laps later, Larson took the lead for the first time. When a spinning Bell brought out the caution on Lap 93, Larson drove on fumes to hang on and win the stage.

The stage victory marked a remarkable rebound for Larson, and the No. 5 team wasn't done yet.

Hendricks enjoying his time with the Cubs

Kyle Hendricks tends to keep his focus on a day-today level.

His mantra helps center his attention on what he can control: his methodical five-day routine and each pitch he must execute over the course of a start. Life experiences and age also put things in perspective.

There are times Hendricks, 33 and now in his 10th major-league season, tries to take things in and appreciate the moment. That especially was true May 25 at Wrigley Field when Hendricks made his season debut. The uncertainty surrounding Hendricks' capsular tear in his right shoulder last year ended his season in early July and required nearly 11 months for him to get back into a big-league game.

"You start to smell the roses, like they say, just a little bit more," Hendricks told the Tribune. "I looked around, really soaked it in. You're just so grateful for what you're able to do on a day-in and day-out basis. Obviously you're in the moment and in the competition of doing your work, but for sure as I've gotten a little older, there's been more times where I've sat back and looked at how grateful I am for how everything's worked out.

"When you're young, you're just trying to get to the next day. I won't fully stop and look back until it's all over. But there's obviously more and more of that the further you go on in your career."

Hendricks has given the Cubs exactly what they needed through 11 outings this season, six of which have been quality starts. Being able to perform painfree is a stark contrast to what he experienced trying to pitch through his shoulthrough his pre-inning warmup, the first five to 10 throws were "just hell." "You don't really don't notice how hurt you are or how bad it feels, you're almost trying to talk yourself through it and you don't want to admit how bad it is maybe," Hendricks said. "You can move your arm, the ball is going to come out, but the amount of pain and the stuff that you're compensating now when you feel healthy again it really illuminates just really how bad you did

Hendricks didn't publicly let on to how compromised he was as he tried pitching through his shoulder problem last season. His inconsistencies, posting a 4.80 ERA in 16 starts, raised questions about the direction of his career. maintained Hendricks belief in himself through the struggles and, with a smile, noted playing the underdog role has been the story of his career. "When you're hurt and you're not feeling great and then you're having to answer for everything you're doing — it's part of it, you've got to do what you've got to do — but deep down you just know you don't have everything you should have and really how much tougher that makes it," Hendricks said. "The margin for error in this game is so small. The confidence obviously comes back when you come back and you're feeling healthy and you're doing the things you know you can do, proving it to yourself again, coming in the results. "I'm having so much fun really, I mean, it helps the confidence soar and with the confidence then starts again." The roster churn over the last three years has left too.'

der injury leading up to his Hendricks as the last player 2022. Every time he went 2016 World Series title team, the link from what the last core accomplished to what this group wants to achieve. Hendricks doesn't often think about his lastman-standing status, predominantly when he's asked about the topic, but his status as the longesttenured Cub does sometimes cross his mind. It can be hard not to when a majority of his teammates were acquired in the last two years.

"To still be a consistent force here, it just again adds to the luck of it all and how grateful I am for the opportunity they've given me," Hendricks said. "So I try and do the best I can to take advantage of that opportunity, to take the ball every fifth day and be the number pitcher, because that's what's kept the ability for me to stay here." Hendricks' short- and long-term future in Chicago is murky. The Cubs (48-51) are taking a three-game winning streak into Tuesday's opener of the City Series and are in trade deadline limbo. They are trending toward becoming buyers ahead of the Aug. 1 deadline and must take care of business in their next six games against the White Sox and Cardinals.

yearslong Hendricks' relationship with president of baseball operations Jed Hoyer can be an asset at a time like this.

'There's so much mutual respect back and forth between the two of us, and I think we both know each other's personality," said Hendricks, who has a team option for 2024. "He knows I'm going to go about my business and not expect much, really my agent takes care of the conversations and that's how I really respect it to go and he does
