Mayor questioned on Pickle policy

The Commercial Review

Portland police officers have been instructed by Mayor Jeff Westlake that they can't eat at The Greazy Pickle during their

He faced push-back for that decision Monday.

Katrina (Myers) Ranly visited Portland City Council during its meeting Monday to question the mayor's order and ask why the restaurant/bar is being singled out.

Myers answered several questions from council member Ron May, who invited her to speak at the conclusion of the meeting.

Westlake has told officers not to visit restaurant/bar during their shifts

Westlake said his intention understanding that the ban on with not allowing officers to patronize The Greazy Pickle during work hours is to preserve an image. He said he'd prefer not to see police vehicles parked in front of the establishment.

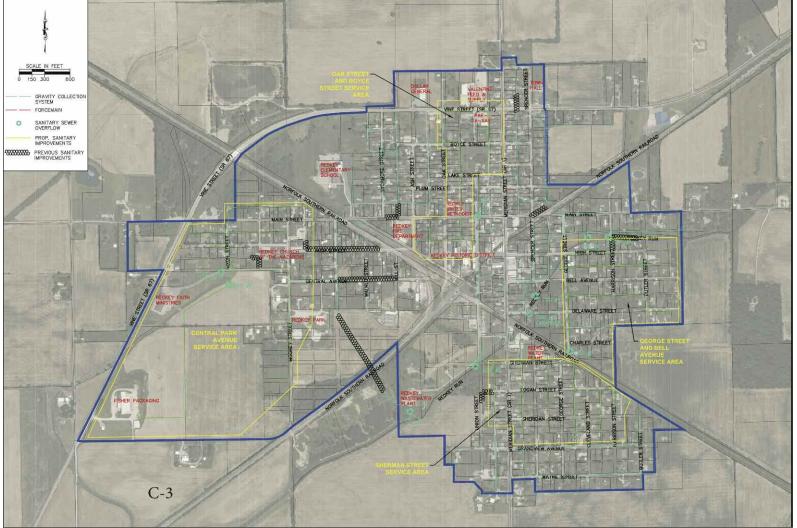

A Greazy Pickle waitress also questioned the "image" that is being upheld, saying she waits on teachers, doctors, lawyers and others on a daily basis.

Myers questioned the assertion as well, saving that if officers are trusted to make the decisions they face every day on the job they should be trusted to eat wherever they'd like and to behave appropriately when doing so.

"This is how I'm going to play it out," said Westlake. "Everybody can be upset with me, and I get that. But I just believe what I believe."

Upgrades needed

The Commercial Review/Bailey Cline

Redkey Town Council heard from Choice One Engineering about the town's master utility plan Monday. Pictured in the graphic above, the firm proposed a nearly $8.4 million project for replacing four wastewater service areas in Redkey. It includes replacing systems along Oak Street and Boyce Street, George Street and Bell Avenue, Central Park Avenue and Sherman Street.

Brenner pleads to dealing narcotics

By BAILEY CLINE The Commercial Review

A Dunkirk man accused of dealing fentanyl resulting in another man's death has pleaded to a lesser charge.

Cody A. Brenner, 33, 317 E. North St., pleaded guilty Tuesday morning to intentionally dealing in a narcotic drug, a Level 2 felony. Brenner had been charged with a Level 1 felony — it has a sentence range between 20 and 40 years – in connection with the death of 26-year-old Dunkirk resident Zachary Long on Sept. 11.

A sentencing hearing was scheduled for 11 a.m. Sept. 27.

A 14-year-old boy, identified as M.N. in court documents, discovered Long. An autopsy indicated Long died from fentanyl exposure. A toxicology report showed he had a blood alcohol level of 0.087%, as well as ethanol, fentanyl and norfentanyl in his body.

According to court documents. Brenner admitted during an interview with police Oct. 24 that he dealt heroin to M.N., and he admitted to purchasing $60 worth of heroin Sept. 10, which he split and sold half to M.N.

Brenner initially denied knowing that the heroin he delivered would cause an overdose, the documents say. During an interview two days later, though, he admitted to selling M.N. a bag of heroin and fentanyl near Broad Street in Dunkirk. He told police "anymore it's all mixed together," court documents say, and he said he didn't know M.N. planned to share the drugs with

M.N. told police Oct. 25 he purchased the fentanyl from Brenner on Sept. 10. He let Long "snort a line," and after the heroin, Long crushed and snorted a Xanax, according to court documents. M.N. left Long's house afterward. M.N. also overdosed that night, but emergency personnel revived him.

Per Indiana Code, dealing narcotics can range between a Level 2 felony and a Level 5 felony, depending on the circumstances. To be defined as a Level 2 felony, the offense must include: at least 10 grams of the drug involved or an enhancing circumstance applies and the drug must have been heroin or a fentanyl containing sub-significant Redkey made upgrades to its wastewater treatment plant along with its mandated sewer separation project that started in 2017 and finished two vears later. Combined wastewater and stormwater lines had been flooding town, leading to untreated sewage overflowing into Redkey Run. IDEM had sent multiple notices of noncompliance to the town, but it wasn't until the town secured a $3.9 million grant and $3.8 million loan from the United States Department of Agriculture in 2014 that it was able to begin planning the project. The wastewater treatment plant underwent extensive renovations eral facelift. Redkey still owes just under about $3.3 million on its 40-year loan for wastewater treatment plant upgrades and the sewer separation project. It also owes $1.1 million for constructing the town's 20-year-old water tower.

per day. During dry weather, the facility services about 127,000 gallons on average daily. However, amid rainy conditions, the plant has seen up to 820,000 gallons.

The main cause of the problem has been stormwater runoff sump entering downspouts, drains, catch basins and other entry points into the wastewater

"That's one thing that we really, really, really want to get down 2.3 times your normal flow is a bad sign," Lefeld said.

For that reason, Lefeld said, the town's existing combined sewer overflows (CSOs) are still operat-

The town has been in violation with Indiana Department of Environmental Management regulations for a CSO that starts near Union Street and another CSO that originates in a rural part of the county just north of town and lets out near Main and George streets. Redkey has until December to update its long-term control plan for addressing the neering tested, four of them were determined to be in poor condition. The testing measured water inflow in those areas to be seven to 23 times higher during rainy weather.

"That's a lot of clear water entering into your system,' noted Lefeld.

Choice One Engineering proposed Redkey make improvements to four service areas, including collection systems on George Street and Bell Avenue, Central Park Avenue, Sherman Street and Oak and Boyce streets. Estimated at $8.4 million, the project would replace about 60% of the town's existing system.

Lefeld also talked about needs for the town's water utilities.

Regarding the distribution system, he noted several water mains — about 8,000 feet (15% of the system) — were replaced with PVC pipes in 2003. The town has about 51,000 feet of water

Lefeld pointed out the town's older parts of the system are starting to deteriorate.

"Your normal 6-inch main now might be a 4-inch main, so that's where some of your distribution issues come from," he explained.

Likewise, the system also experiences an average of two breaks a year. He pointed out a water main along Spencer Street that has been repaired about 15

The loss of water as a result of these issues leads to a loss in revenue. A water loss audit performed for the 2021 reporting year measured the town's water loss at about 26%. Lefeld noted typically communities aim to keep that percentage under 15%.

Investing in a four-step project — it involves replacing mains on Spencer Street from Meridian to Vine streets, on Vine Street from Meridian to Sycamore streets, on Bell Avenue from Harrison Delaware streets and on Main Street from Harrison to Delaware streets — would cost the town upward of $2 million.

Concerns have also been raised about dead-end mains in various parts of the town. Choice One Engineering also proposed looping the system, which would help improve flow throughout the community. That project is expected to cost approximately $814,725.

Also, Lefeld talked about stormwater collection and residents' concerns regarding flooding. Choice One Engineering suggested Redkey could implement a stormwater utility fee to pay for improvements to the system. Those improvements could include installing new systems along Spencer, High, George and Main streets and Bell Avenue for an estimated overall cost at more than $2.8 million. (Most grant applications for such improvements require the municipality have a stormwater utility fee in place.)

Choice One Engineering will aid Redkey in its pursuit of additional grant funding to make improvements to the town's utilities. Hopes are to secure a grant or loan to make upgrades possible.

For now, the town will send its approved master utility plan to Indiana Office of Community and Rural Affairs to finish out the water infrastructure planning grant.

By JACK RONALD The Commercial Review

Plugging down Interstate 90, heading for home after two weeks of vacation, we passed the exit for Geneva on the Lake, east of Cleveland, and I found myself smiling.

The memories were much too strong.

It was 1979, I think, when we were taking the same route in a VW camper bus that we'd borrowed from my parents. They only owned the thing for a couple of years, and I think their children camped with it almost as much as they did.

Lake exit in search of a campground there and had stopped at a supermarket to get some supplies before heading on.

It was a horribly hot day, a classic August oven, and everyone was getting a little grouchy. By everyone, I mean my wife and I and our twins, who were at that point just 2 years old.

Doing anything with 2-year-old twins requires planning, maneuvering and logistics, even if it's just a matter of going to the supermarket. So we unloaded a double-wide, collapsible stroller, plonked the girls into it and We'd taken the Geneva on the enjoyed the air-conditioning in about what to do next. Someone

But when I turned the key, the engine wouldn't start. There was plenty of juice, but the VW had an early version of fuel injection and the engine wasn't getting enough gas. Opening the engine cover did no good because I didn't have a clue what the heck I was looking for. The air-cooled VW engine looked as much like a sewing machine as it did a motor.

So there we were. It was about 6:30 p.m. It was hot and muggy. The 2-year-olds were getting fussy, and so were their parents.

We did the only thing we could think of. We took a walk. Actually, it was an attempt to keep the kids occupied while we talked injectors were balky in hot weather, so we figured that letting the engine cool off wasn't a bad idea either.

Still, when you're as allthumbs mechanically as I am and you're a long drive from home and the ice cream's melting, you're not far from panick-

Maybe that's what prompted me to flag someone down. We'd walked about a block from the store when I spotted a VW bus. It wasn't a camper, and it was a newer model. But VW owners are famous for doing their own service when they can. I figured the driver could help.

And boy did he help.

Before we knew it, the driver and his wife scooped us into their van, took us back to the parking lot and set to work.

They couldn't start the thing either, but they weren't willing

Next thing we knew, we were at their house and the driver was on the phone to a guy he knew who was a VW mechanic for a Cleveland dealership.

It was about half an hour later that we reassembled with the mechanic at the supermarket parking lot. The ice cream, as I recall, had already been consumed. And, sure enough, the fuel injection system had cooled off sufficiently so that the engine started.

There were thank yous all around as we headed down the

It was a long, long time ago. The twins are grown and living in Boston. The VW camper didn't stay with the family more than another year, and I have no idea whatever became of the folks who were so kind to us that hot August afternoon.

Ukraine advances may be turning point

New York Daily News Tribune News Service

About two and a half years into Russia's invasion of Ukraine, the latter has turned the tables with an incursion into the Russian region of Kursk once the site of a pivotal World War II battle that by some estimates has left it with control of more than 1,000 square kilometers.

While both countries have now taken territory, there is no equivalence at all: Russia's attack on Ukraine was wholly unprovoked, whereas Ukraine's incursion is in direct response to Russia's attempted subjugation. Russia is in Ukraine's territory because it intends to annex it as part of some misguided imperial project, forcing full assimilation or else.

Ukraine has no intention of annexing Russia's territory, but instead President Volodymyr Zelenskyy is seeking to temporarily hold it as leverage over the much larger aggressor, having realized that President Vladimir Putin can keep secure because of it. throwing troops at the ly dissuaded without more acute consequences. The Ukrainian troops have targeted Russian forces and caused some Russian civilians to flee, but are not engaged in a wide campaign of terror, morale-breaking and war crimes, as their Russian counterparts have been credibly accused of doing during their invasion.

Putin wanted war, he's getting war. He believed his "special military operation" would have his troops marching into Kyiv within the week and Zelenskyy would fold, and he was dead wrong. These are the consequences; the despot has no ground to stand on to cry foul. Let's hope that Zelenskyy and his military leadership has gamed out the impact on all the front lines, as this offensive, tactically sound as it might be in its objectives, should not come at the cost of losing to Russian

NATO and other allies. Everything from the Ukrainians' small arms to drones to artillery ammunition depends in large part on this aid, which is what sustains their ability to keep Russia at bay and strike back. Without these commitments, Ukraine would have certainly lost this war already, and we would all be worse off and less Whatever claims to have, it's obvious that this flimsy rationalization would not stop him looking further afield. He's always hated the notion of a European mutual-defense pact, and attacked Ukraine in part to stick it to NATO. What's to stop him from continuing on this project if he were to succeed with Ukraine? If anything, he'd be far more emboldened, though would have a diminished military with which to actually pursue these ends; despite his projected attributes, though, the man is clearly not all too strategic.

The tides of the war have appeared to have shifted enough that no one can say with any measure of certainty how things are going to go. This Ukrainian taking of Russian territory certainly marks a shift, both in momentum and strategy. How significant, we'll have to see, but one thing is for sure: Ukraine needs It's worth bearing in us and its other allies, and is proving that it can effectively use the tools we give it. Let's not let from the United States, bling derail that help.

Fun is a winning game plan

Two unlikely stars in recent weeks have delighted all ages with their joyful cheerleading for Team USA -NBC's Olympic-gold star Snoop Dogg and America's favorite new football coach, Tim Walz.

Like an NFL draft pre-show, politiconflict and won't be easi- claims to Ukraine Putin cal commentators handicapped the strengths and vulnerabilities of top recruit Minnesota Governor Tim Walz before Vice President Kamala Harris officially picked him as her running mate, as the Olympics were in full swing.

Former high school football coach Walz's rallies brought competitive spirit, huge crowds and contagious chants of "U-S-A" to cable news channels, providing a charming split screen with Snoop's pure encouraging energy supporting American athletes in their pursuit of gold.

These guys are loving their star turn — but they're not hogging the limelight for themselves. The genius of Snoop as a sports commentator is in his unabashed enthusiasm for the athletes. He's equal parts impressed hype man and encouraging big brother to the athletes, showing viewers the inside story of the newer or more complicated events.

Walz plays a similar role in the presidential race — hyping up Kamala Harris and fighting back against bullies who have gone unchallenged for far too long. It's like he's been waiting to take on Donald Trump for years, stockpiling replies and witty comebacks to use at just the right time. Well, it's the right time, and Tim Walz is having a blast. Walz and Snoop have shown us how much fun it is to cheer for the winning team and to be your teammate's biggest champion. Ratings and social media love may prove NBC made the right choice Olympics, but a late-night chat with the Wall Street Journal's Jason Gay shows Snoop knew it all along: "This opportunity wasn't nothing but a chance for me to show the world what it's supposed to look like when you put the right person in the right envi-

Midwestern football coach with an infectious spirit, laid-back competitiveness and gold-medal smile. Snoop and Walz's sartorial choices are all part of the fun. Snoop's redwhite-and-blue tracksuits Olympic ring sunglasses alongside Coach Walz's weekend casual Carhartt and camo cap — it's all very patriotic, personal and relatable. On the campaign's merch store, the Har-

Walz takes pride in winning more than just elections and state championship football games — when pointing out the Republican Party's danrefusal to regulate firearms, he told a crowd of more than 15,000 people in Arizona this week that as a congressman he was the top gun in the congressional trap shoot for three years in a row. Reminiscent of Turkey's silver-medal-winning shooter, it's not hard to imagine Walz in old jeans and a worn T-shirt with Snoop as a correspondent the while other members of Congress rip ocratic media strategist.

While the rest of us have been dragging ourselves through the next day after staying up late watching Olympics recaps or 11 p.m. coverage of packed Harris-Walz rallies, adrenaline has kicked in for these guys. Right out of the gate at his first rally with Harris. Walz told the packed house in Philadelphia, "We'll sleep when we're dead." It's hard to stop when you're having this much fun squeezing the most out of the moment — Snoop says: "This ain't the time to sleep. It's the time to be on it like you want it." Well, whether it's gold in women's soccer or the election of the first woman president, we want it.

With the Olympics closing ceremony behind us, Snoop and his upbeat summer vibes have passed the baton to happy warrior Walz for the sprint through to November. In his latenight interview with the WSJ, Snoop's words about America's potential for gold when flag football comes to the 2028 games sounded an awful lot like a Walz warning about a Trump/Vance future: "We should have an advantage in America,' Snoop said, chuckling. "Come on man. Don't send the wrong people out

Whether they're barnstorming Paris or battleground swing states, Snoop and Walz have helped us all cheer for America with new enthusiasm — bringing the whole family together to praise our athletes, embrace our strengths and cheer together for victory. It's been exhilarating, it's been inclusive and yes, it's been joyful. And you get the very real feeling, as Snoop says, that the fun really is just "me being me." Both men are having the time of their lives and we are all feeling it.

Trust

Continued from page 1 The benefit of joining an insurance trust — they are groups of schools who partner together on insurance — is that they spread the risk across a larger pool of employees, thus minimizing the chance for significant fluctuations like Jay Schools experienced this year.

Plans call for Current to survey school employees about the possibility of joining a trust. The insurance committee is then expected to have a recommendation at the board's Sept. 16 meeting.

If the school board decides to pursue joining a trust, the corporation would apply to both the East Central Trust and North Central Trust. If accepted, they would join one and employees would be enrolled by Thanksgiving in advance of a Jan. 1 start date in the new insur-

As Indiana contemplates a massive and controversial water pipeline, a new study shows that the state's water supply is "plentiful," but not evenly distributed. Researchers said that caveat makes completion of a statewide water management plan — driven by local input — even more urgent.

The report, released Monday, was commissioned by the Indiana Chamber of Commerce. It follows a similar study on the state's water supply released by the chamber a decade ago.

Greg Ellis, vice president of energy and environmental policy for the Indiana chamber, said the goal is to help set the stage for an integrated water management plan for the state — a key infrastructure and energy priority in the chamber's Indiana Prosperity 2035 plan.

Like the first effort, the latest study was prepared by Texas-based environmental consulting firm INTERA Incorporated, which has a location in Bloomington.

The Indiana chamber has prioritized the state having superior infrastructure and energy through its latest visioning plan for the state. ... The specific water goal is to invest in a framework and planning to address fresh and wastewater needs on a statewide and regional basis to meet current and future demand for economic develop-ment," Ellis said. "We believe this study offers the guidance to help us get there. It looks at the current water levels and what legislators and planners can do to ensure that the state is in the strongest future position possible." The study doesn't specifi- over the last two decades.

The project supported by Indiana economic development officials dubbed Limitless Exploration/Advanced Pace (LEAP) Research and Innovation District — could bring construction of a pipeline that stretches 50 miles, carrying up to 100 million gallons of water

Indianapolis-based pharmaceutical giant Eli Lilly & Co. has planned a $3.7 billion facility at LEAP; the state is also competing to attract a water-guzzling semiconductor manufacturing facility worth $50 billion and other large plants. State officials are continuing to study the feasibility of the pipeline and its potential impacts on regional water supplies. # What to expect at your next eye exam

Regular eye examinations are important components of a personal health regimen. Visiting an eye doctor can alert a person to potential vision impairments, and certain symptoms that show up in the eyes could be indicative of notable health problems. The American Academy of Ophthalmology says everything from brain tumors to aneurysms to high cholesterol can be detected in the eves.

For those who do not have any apparent vision problems, most doctors recommend following a chart based on age. The insurance experts at Aetna suggest the following age-based intervals:

- Ages 20 to 39: Every five years · Ages 40 to 54: Every two to four
- Ages 55 to 64: Every one to three years

· Ages 65 and up: Every one to two years

Individuals who wear glasses or contact lenses, have a family history of eye disease, or have a chronic condition that puts them at risk for eye disease, like diabetes, should get vision exams more frequently.

Despite the significance of eye exams, many people do not visit an eye doctor until something is amiss with their vision or eyes. Perhaps individuals would be inclined to visit the eye doctor more frequently if they knew what to expect during an exam. Here's what people can expect the next time they step into a private eye doctor's office or a vision center, courtesy of The Cleveland Clinic and Warby Parker.

· Visual acuity: The eye doctor will ask you to read an eye chart while looking through a device called a phoropter. This device has several lenses that can be adjusted to help you see better and find the right corrective lens prescription.

check peripheral vision by holding on the surface of the eye to get a up a finger or an object and moving it gradually to the side of your face. Additional movements may include up and down. Some offices use a computer program to conduct this test.

· Automatic refraction: Visual acuity can be measured with this test, during which an autorefractor shines light into the eye and measures the eye's response. It's commonly used with children or adults who may struggle to communicate what they're seeing.

Pupil function: The eye doctor will briefly shine a handheld light into each eve and then move the light away to watch how the pupils constrict and dilate.

Slit lamp exam: This test involves a slit lamp, which is a type of microscope that enables the eye doctor to see the eyes in close detail.

· Tonometry measurement: Glaucoma occurs when intraocular pressure is high. Some eye doctors will conduct tests to determine the pressure. One way is with a non-contact tonometry test, which is a puff of air squirted at each eye. With applanation tonometry, the doctor first administers a mild numbing agent to the eye, and then uses a pressure-· Visual field: The doctor will sensitive instrument to gently tap pressure reading. A rebound tonometry test requires a handheld device that makes brief contact to the eye and doesn't require local anesthesia.

> · Pupil dilation: The eye doctor will administer eye drops that dilate the pupils, which enables a better view of the retina, optic nerve, cornea, and surrounding blood vessels during an ophthalmoscopy.

· Special photography: The eye doctor may utilize specialized imaging equipment that will take digital images of the eyes to diagnose various retinal, optic nerve and corneal conditions.

These are some of the things people may experience during a comprehensive vision exam.

Continued from page 2 At the conclusion of a nearly half-hour discussion on the issue, Myers asked the mayor that he reconsider his stance. Softening from his previous statements, he said he will think about it. The mayor and May also clashed earlier in the meeting when discussing the proposed 2025 salary ordinance. Among other things, it includes an 8% raise for the mayor.

May expressed his opposition to the increase for the mayor.

"I'm not in favor of giving the mayor a raise," he said. "He knew what the salary was. I just don't think he's worthy of a pay raise at this point."

"So the next time you come in here smelling of alcohol, should I ask the officers to take you out," Westlake responded.

May said that was fine, with Westlake saying he would do so.

The salary ordinance was then passed on a 4-2 vote with Kent McClung, Michele Brewster, Goldsworthy and Golden in favor, May and Hilfiker dissenting and Mike Aker absent. (Hilfiker clarified later that she is in support of the ordinance, saying she thought other financial considerations were going to be discussed before the vote.)

As approved, the salary ordinance for includes 6% raises for all city employees, 8% raises for superintendents, the clerk-treasurer and the mayor, and $100 per year longevity pay capped at 20 years. (Elected officials excluded longevity pay.) Council also heard a presentation from Rundell, Ernstberger and Associates partner and landscape architect Cecil Penland regarding a plan for development of the 68 acres on the west side of Portland. It involves mixed-use properties commercial on the first floor with apartments along Votaw Street (Indiana 67) and various types of housing extending to the north. (If fully completed, the project would create 76 singlefamily homes, eight duplexes and 154 multifamily units.)

Council members had various questions about the effort, including what is needed from the council at this time. Penland said if the project moves forward the main contributions from the city will be to allow hooking into its water and wastewater utilities. Consultant Ed Curtin of CWC Latitudes added that some rezoning may be required.

Asked by Westlake for a timeline, Penland said if funding is secured the first phase of the project could go to bid in fall 2025.

In other business, coun- Heard funding requests from the city's department heads for their 2025 budgets. Each of the departments asked for increases, with the street department asking for funds for additional maintenance, the park board for capital improvements and repairs, the fire department to add a fulltime firefighter and police for new vehicles and equipment.

•Agreed to consider funding for the Children's Advocacy Center following a presentation about the services it provides in Jay and Randolph counties. It responds to child with child welfare and the law enforcement system in a united response. In operation since late 2020, the center has involved in 525 cases. Council heard a request for $8,000 to $10,000 to support the center's mission. (About 80% of its work is federally funded.)

·Heard McClung, Golden and the mayor welcome visitors to the Tri-State Antique Engine and Tractor Show, which officially began today. "I know it gums up out traffic a little bit, but by golly it's exciting that people want to come to Portland, Indiana, by the tens of thousands and spend their money," said McClung. "I really appreciate what Tri-State does.'

 Approved, on first and second reading, amendment to the 2024 payroll ordinance to add a line item for a part-time mayor's secretary. Clerktreasurer Lori Phillips explained that the line item has existed for years but was inadvertently omitted from the 2024 ordinance. (The mayor's office is currently without a full-time secretary and has hired a part-time employee.)

•Learned from Westlake that the city is working on hiring a code enforcement officer.

South East West North Pass Pass Pass Pass Pass Opening lead — diamond queen.

A declarer should assume that the defenders are doing their best to try to defeat him, basing many of his plays on the method of defense chosen by his opponents. This reli-ance on their plays often helps him greatly when he is faced with a difficult situation.

Consider this deal where West leads the queen of diamonds against six clubs. Superficially, it seems South must go down one, since he has a spade loser and a diamond loser. However, South can make the slam if he plays correctly.

He takes the diamond queen with the ace, draws trump, cashes the A-K of hearts and ruffs a heart. The ten of diamonds is then led presenting East with the option of winning the trick with the king or letting his partner win with the jack. But regardless of which option East chooses, declarer makes the slam.

First, let's say East lets his part-ner win the diamond with the jack. In that case, West must yield a ruff-and-discard or return a spade that allows South's queen to score the slam-going trick. Now let's say East wins the diamond with the king. He must then also yield a ruff-and-discard or return a spade. Obviously, East's best choice is a low spade return because that gives declarer a chance to go wrong in deciding whether to play the five or the queen.

But South should have no trouble deciding which of the two cards to play. He should reason that if East but the king of stades he would had the king of spades, he would have allowed West to win the diamond trick. East's willingness to take the lead strongly suggests that he does not have the king, so South should play the five. If he does, he traps West's king and makes the ## ill Jason Bean make Colts' 53-man roster?

The Kansas City Star Tribune News Service

Former Kansas Jayhawks quarterback Jason Bean has not yet guaranteed himself a spot on the Indianapolis Colts' 53-man regular-season NFL roster or 17-player practice squad.

The 6-foot-2, 195-pound, 25-year-old undrafted free agent has played well enough in the Colts' first two exhibition games, however, to be mentioned as a strong possibility to be Indy's No. 3 QB behind Anthony Richardson, the No. 4 overall pick in the 2023 NFL Draft, and 39vear-old Joe Flacco.

Indy for the No. 3 signalcaller slot and/or a coveted practice-squad spot. Also in the mix are former Texas

QB Sam Ehlinger, a sixthround pick in 2021 who is way people talk about familiar with coach Shane Steichen's system, and rookie Kedon Slovis out of BYU.

"The most interesting player at Colts camp is their No. 4 or 5 quarterback," Indy Star columnist Gregg Doyel wrote of Bean on social media site X. "There's something special here. You see it at practice and after practice. On and off the field.'

In another X post, Doyel wrote: "The Colts expected to move ex-Kansas quarterback Jason Bean to wide receiver by now (because of his speed), but Bean keeps He is battling it out in excelling at QB. Now the Colts wonder what they have in this unique package of arm, speed and lead-

Dovel also tweeted: "The Jason Bean is fascinating."

In his pro debut against Denver on Aug. 11, Bean completed 4 of 6 passes for 51 yards and one touchdown — a 16-yard pass to Laquon Treadwell. He also had four carries for 24 yards, with a long gain of 11 yards.

Against Arizona on Saturday, Bean completed 7 of 9 passes for 94 yards with one interception. He also was sacked once for a 12yard loss and rushed four times for 14 yards and a 1yard TD score.

Bean's performance Saturday impressed Colts coach Steichen.

"He made a ton of plays," Steichen told colts.com. "Two touchdown-scoring drives, had the big fourth-and-one conversion, had a It was exciting. He did a lot of good things for us for

If Bean does get cut his immediate future will likely be decided sometime after the Colts' final preseason game (Thursday night at Cincinnati) — it could be because of the first drive he led against Arizona. One play after getting sacked, he threw an interception that led to an Arizona TD that gave the Cardinals a 7-3

However, if he makes the team or practice squad, the drive he led next might be a key reason. He bounced back immediately, leading Indy on a 10-play, 75-yard TD drive capped by a rushing TD from running back Zavier Scott.

That's the game, it's a team game, and that's kind of how it has to be. And it's good to see that, feel that, even without words being said."

Receiver D.J. Montgomery said: "I feel like every time, Bean gets better and better. "Each snap, it's like he gets better and better, and more comfortable.

"I feel like Bean can do a lot of everything," Montgomery added. "He can run, he can pass. It's good to have a mobile quarter-told Colts.com, referring to rushed 47 ties for 280 Bean. "Everybody feels the yards and three TDs. He directed KU to a 49-36 win over UNLV in the Guaranteed Rate Bowl, earning MVP honors.

Reporter Amanda Foster of colts.com summed up Bean's current situation this way: "With a victory and his first NFL touchdown under his belt, Bean has one more chance during the Colts' joint practice and preseason game against the Cincinnati Bengals to prove what he's capable of. And he'll go into it with confidence."

NFL teams must trim their rosters to 53 players Bean a year ago com- by Tuesday, Aug. 27. The third and final week of the 2024 preseason will conclude Sunday night.

Clark gets T for being 'disrespectful to the game'

By STEVE HENSON

Los Angeles Times

Tribune News Service Getting snubbed by the U.S. Olympic women's basketball team turned out to be just what Caitlin Clark needed — a month off to refresh her game, refuel her temper and remind everyone she says stuff that grabs atten-

Sure, the Olympic team won a record eighth consecutive gold medal without her, but it didn't take long for Clark to regain the spotlight. On Sunday, the Indiana Fever point guard set a WNBA record, thanked a referee for assessing her with a technical foul and cried poor-mouth over her salary even though she makes millions in endorsements.

Best known as a scoring machine with almost limitless 3point range, Clark set a WNBA mark for assists in a season by a rookie, notching nine to increase her total to 232. The 22-year-old is on pace to break the overall record of 316 set by Alyssa Thomas a year ago.

She also was assessed her fifth technical of the season after punching the base of the basket when she missed a shot in the third quarter. Two more technicals and she'll be suspended for a

The referee "told me it was disrespectful to the game of basketball," Clark said. "Had nothing to do with my team, had nothing to do with the reffing, had nothing to do with the other team. It's just because I'm a competitor, large part because of Clark's popularity. But don't expect a GoFundMe page any time soon. Ponying up for a $1,600 Fever season ticket for every Clark from Indy to Iowa wouldn't dent her portfolio.

She was paid an estimated $3 million in name, image and likeness money while at Iowa, and before playing a WNBA game signed eight-figure deals with Nike (for signature shoes) and Wilson (for signature basketballs). She also has partnerships with Gatorade, Panini, Xfinity, Gainbridge and State Farm.

Back-of-the-backboard calculations of her estimated career earnings exceed $400 million.

Why? Keep in mind that her final college game drew 24 million TV viewers — more than three times larger than the audience for Serena Williams' final tennis match. More than 3 million ESPN viewers watched her simply get drafted.

So for Clark to bemoan WNBA salaries is best interpreted as her going to bat for teammates and league-mates such as Hull, a Stanford product who will be paid $77,669 this season. Endorsements for most WNBA players are few.

Clark, in fact, was exuberant in her praise of Hull's performance, joking that her entire social media account "will be about Lexie. I'm going to change my bio to Lexie Hull Fan Page.

More likely is that Clark will continue to set records, rake in supply-and-demand dollars and generate headlines.
