Bentz pleads to sexual misconduct

Former jail officer faces 7.5 years in prison

By BAILEY CLINE

The Commercial Review A former Jay County Jail correction officer pleaded guilty Friday to engaging in sexual relations with an inmate.

William B. Bentz. 36. Portland, pleaded to three counts of sexual misconduct in which a service provider engages fondling or touching with a person who is subject to lawful detention or supervision with the intent to arouse or satisfy sexual desires, all three Level 6 felonies. As a part of his plea agreement, a Level 5 felony for sexual misconduct when the service provider engages in sexual intercourse or other sexual conduct with the person subject to lawful detention or supervision was dismissed.

Bentz's sentencing hearing is scheduled for 11 a.m. March 13.

According to the probable cause affidavit filed in connection with the case, Bentz engaged in sexual acts with an inmate, identified as J.G., between March and April 2024. Bentz allegedly fondled the inmate's breasts and vagina on several occasions, allowed her to touch his penis and took her into an exam room at the jail and had her perform oral sex on him April 28.

The affidavit says video footage shows Bentz visiting J.G.'s cell and removing her from her cell block amount of time(s)" into rooms that are offcamera on several occasions, according to the affidavit. Documents say J.G. could be seen rubbing her crotch with a smile on her face while talking to Bentz in the hallway or at her cell door.

"It is clear that Bentz and (jg) are engaging in way more than just work and officer inmate activity," the affidavit says.

House GOP proposes state budget

> Chief budget architect for Republicans, Rep. Jeff Thompson. said both camps found plenty to agree upon, aligning priorities for universal school vouchers and halting several large-dollar funds for the Indiana Economic Development Corp.

Thompson, R-Lizton. "We'll continue discussion with him, consulting with him and look forward to working with him in the future."

Both the House and governor's version trim roughly 5% from agency budgets, which Thompson said would be geared toward administrative costs rather than staff or service reductions.

"The way this administration is operating, we'll do a whole lot more with a whole lot less, Thompson said. "That's their mindset and I love that mindset."

Overall, the House budget will spend $500 million more in 2026 and $380 million more in 2027 than Braun, though the bulk of new spending goes to the Department students. of Child Services and the Department of Correction. Those new dollars represent just under 2% of a $47 billion budget.

The appropriation for schools increases by 2% each year, or from $9.03 billion in the 2025 fiscal year to $9.21 billion in 2026 followed by $9.4 billion in 2027. The $160 million for curricular materials is rolled into that foundational amount for schools.

Those dollars also include an estimated $183 million over the next two years to expand school vouchers to all students, including those families earning more than $220,000 annually. Thompson said public schools, where the majority of Hoosier students are educated, could get those dollars if they attract those high-income

WASHINGTON — A federal judge imposed a temporary restraining order on the Trump administration's executive order freezing all foreign assistance funding.

She said Bentz paid a lot of attention to her. He asked her to write sexual letters to him, which he would collect from her during his shifts at the jail.

'It started out as if she wanted the attention from Bentz but turned out to be more than she wanted and she wanted it to stop after some time," court documents said.

She said he would refuse to stop, and she felt forced to participate.

J.G. said Bentz asked her to pretend she was sick on April 28 and he removed her from her cell block and took her to the exam room to "check her vitals," the report says. She then performed oral sex on him. J.G. also said they fondled one another in the commissary room at one point.

She said she exposed her breasts to Bentz while the jail commander was in the cell block in a separate cell area once and couldn't see them.

He would get upset if she didn't provide him with letters detailing sexual acts between them and threatened she would get in trouble if others found out about it, she told police. In exchange, Bentz provided her with tobacco pouches and gifts.

J.G. told police Bentz informed her that he and his wife would like her to move in with them to be their "unicorn" once she was released from jail, court documents say.

Bentz denied allegations when police interviewed him, saying he had done nothing wrong and didn't have a sexual relationship with J.G.

Other inmates shared similar stories to J.G.. although one said neither she nor any of her cellmates saw what Bentz was doing with J.G. in her cell.

DEAR ABBY: My husband is an adrenaline junkie who loves high speeds and fast cars. I am the opposite. I hate riding in fast cars, on roller coasters or anything adrenaline-related. I have explained to him many times that I don't enjoy going fast in his super-fast car, yet he keeps asking me to go with him. I'll do it sometimes, but I hate it. If I refuse to accompany him, he feels rejected. I have tried saying it nicely, but he keeps insisting I go on fast drives with him. I don't know what to do anymore. Please help. — SLOWER IN THE U.K.

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I had dinner with some friends, a married couple. After dinner, we left the restaurant a few minutes apart and, as we were walking to our car, I told my husband the wife was "really intense and sometimes a lot to handle." I didn't realize they were still within earshot. My husband pointed out that they probably heard me, but I'm not sure. Can I do anything? DEAR NEEDS SHELTER: No, I do not! It would be a huge mistake to move in with anyone you have known for only a month. If you think staying in a shelter until you can get on your feet and be independent causes your anxiety and depression to act up, it would be nothing compared to living with a stranger who might be abusive. As you stated, you haven't even met this person yet. A gamble like this is very risky, and I don't recommend it.

Managing records needs to be easier

Bloomberg Opinion Tribune News Service

The U.S. health-care system exchanges tens of millions of patient records a day. Thanks to recent technological advances, the ability to analyze such large amounts of data has improved markedly.

Why, then, are patients still filling out clipboards of redundant information, or juggling multiple passwords and portals to make a doctor's appointment?

Over the past 15 years, the government has spent more than $35 billion attempting to modernize health data-sharing. Yet the typical patient experience hardly improved. Designing a saner, more user-friendly system isn't only a matter of convenience; it should improve care, boost efficiency and lay the groundwork for technological advances to

The earliest medicalrecords systems started in academic centers in the 1960s and '70s. A "health IT" sector emerged about a decade later. By the early 2000s, a series of reports suggested the myriad benefits of digital records from increased legibility to quicker access — would reduce medical errors and save lives.

President Barack Obama soon became an evangelist for this effort. "We will make sure that every doctor's office and hospital in this country is using cutting-edge technology and electronic medicai records," he said in 2008, just before taking office. Two months later, Congress passed a fatefully ambitious law to accelerate the digitization of health data, largely through incentive payments to providers that shuttled generous subsidies to vendors.

You might guess what happened next. Anxious to meet the subsidy deadlines penalties, avoid providers adopted what software was available. Inferior products became an entrenched and detested feature of medical practice.

Lawmakers, once dazzled by the notion of data beaming between nodes of an interconnected health-care system, eventually realized they'd overlooked the industry's disincentives to share lucrative patient information with their competitors.

By then, the money was spent and providers were locked into an immature technology that frustrates patients and infuriates doctors. More than 70% of hospitals report challenges exchanging data across vendors, and 57% say they struggle to identify the correct patient.

Although almost all hos-offer electronic medical records, more than a fifth patients haven't accessed their data within the past year. Meanwhile, many providers, especially in poorer areas, aren't digitized at all. Just 13% of family-medicine physicians say information in their electronic healthrecords system is easy to find and use.

Fixing this dysfunction won't be easy. Many hospital executives have concluded that finding a new vendor isn't worth the cost uncertainty. providers who participate in Medicare, incentive payments are still tied to a litany of data-sharing requirements. (Those unsure about their qualifications can consult an "eligibility decision tree.") For all their flaws, the biggest electronic-records vendors deliver a product that reliably checks the boxes and sends the bills.

Even so, progress is still possible. A public-private effort to remove data-sharing impediments launched in 2022. Last year, a large vendor announced it will allow patients to share their health data with other apps. In theory, that should make it easier for a patient visiting a new doctor to preload personal information, insurance details and past records, as well as remove some of the waiting-room drudgery. It will also enable patients to upload records to artificialintelligence tools for a "second opinion" or plain-English explanations of their which diagnoses, becoming remarkably accurate.

If companies want consumers to use such products, they'll need to demonstrate they're serious about patient privacy and data security. Record-sharing alerts, similar to banknotifications, transfer would be a good start.

Congress should likewise clarify how existing privacy and liability laws apply to these new applications. It should also fund basic research to determine how the use of electronic records improves health outcomes — which is, after all, the point.

The gap between the maddening inefficiencies and potential benefits of electronic health records is narrower than it may seem. With the right reforms, the American health-care business may pitals say they're able to yet enter the 21st century.

Presidents made same mistake

By JOHN KRULL

TheStatehouseFile.com Joe Biden and Donald Trump are vastly different men — and vastly different presidents.

Yet they both made the same key, even fundamental, mistake at the beginning of their presidencies.

Biden, of course, was the blue-collar boy made good, the guy to state schools and worked his way through life bolstered by the strength of his unfailing amiability. His conquest of an early-in-life stammer allowed him to unleash a gift for blarney, which endeared him to friends and foes alike and obscured how keenly he studied and understood the processes of government.

That keen understanding allowed him as president to build a record of legislative accomplishments greater than any president since Lyndon perhaps Johnson—and Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

Trump is a trust-fund baby, a congenital hustler from Queens who has been failing upward from birth. He is contemptuous of systems and processes and scoffs at the idea of a meritocracy, believing that everything is a scam and that, when the action is flowing, everyone takes or gets taken.

His determination to survive in a world made up exclusively of those who con and those who get conned enabled him to develop an ability unrivaled in U.S. history to command the public's attention.

These are two men—two leaders with fundamentally different views of life and approaches to leadership. Yet, they both arrived at the same crucial misunderstanding when they arrived in the White House. They both forgot why they were elected and decided to pursue courses of action unsupported and unsanctioned by the voters who elected first presidency and restore a sense of normalcy to America's public dis-

His mastery of the legislative process was impressive, but his victories in Congress gave Trump and other Republican critics openings to attack him as a master of social engineering.

And a public wearied by a great pandemic, beleaguered by inflation and confused by years of social changes—a public that primarily wanted peace and quiet—turned against Biden.

That opened the door for Trump's return to power.

Trump won the presidency in 2024 on the strength of two issues. Voters, many of whom harbored a profound distaste for Trump's character and contact, wanted a president who would bring prices down and they wanted curbs on undocumented immigration.

That was enough to gain Trump the White House for a second time, but not enough to allow him to secure more than 50% of the popular vote. For the third straight presidential election, more Americans voted

Even so, he declared that he had received a sweeping mandate.

Once in office, Trump began distancing himself from his campaign promises. He said that curbing inflation would be difficult to do and began manipulating data so online search engines would create the impression that deportations and other attempts to curtail undocumented immigration were more plentiful and aggressive than they were in

Instead, he and his administration focused their attention on dismantling huge sections of the federal government. Some of this activity has been blatantly unconstitutional. Some initiatives, such as plutocrat Elon Musk's campaign to make government programs "more efficient," are clearly illegal. Yet Trump, like Biden before him, has chosen to devote himself not to the issues that got him elected but instead to dedicate his time, energy and political capital to a far more sweeping personal agenda. That the more than 50 percent of the American public that didn't vote for him and a fair portion of the minority that did cast ballots for him doesn't and won't back this agenda doesn't seem to deter Trump. Joe Biden paid a heavy political price for refusing to dance with the ones who brung him.

Donald Trump's followers always have been more willing than the supporters of most other politicians to accept broken promises and even outright lies from him.

But even they will eventually begin to realize that he isn't doing what they hired him to do.

And there will be a cost for that.

Kennedy confirmed as HHS secretary

CQ-Roll Call Tribune News Service

WASHINGTON — The Senate voted Thursday morning to confirm Robert F. Kennedy Jr. to serve as Health and Human Services secretary.

The final vote was 52-48, with Sen. Mitch McConnell, R-Kentucky, a polio survivor, becoming the only Republican to vote against Kennedy. McConnell has become the rare GOP "no" vote on President Donald Trump's nominations, also voting against Defense Secretary Pete Hegseth and, yesterday, against Tulsi Gabbard as director of national inteldone the re-litigation of proven cures, and neither will millions of Americans who credit their survival and quality of life to scientific miracles ... a record of trafficking in dangerous conspiracy theories and eroding trust in public health institutions does not entitle Mr. Kennedy to lead these important efforts.

"As he takes office, I sincerely hope Mr. Kennedy will choose not to sow further doubt and division but to restore trust in our public health institutions."

The Senate vote came after

Democrats held the Senate floor throughout the night to voice their opposition to Kennedy's confirmation in a series of blistering speeches.

Democrats are worried about Kennedy's long history of sowing doubt in the scientific data that support vaccines and his inexperience with the federal health agencies.

But his Republican supporters are hopeful that Kennedy, 71, an environmental lawyer and antivaccine activist, can bring a newfound focus to chronic disease and nutrition — areas that they nominee's history of anti-vaccine think have been affected by industry influence in the health agencies. The sprawling department includes the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services, the Food and Drug Administration and the National Institutes of Health, among other agencies.

In their floor speeches, Democrats drew attention to Kennedy's past and painted him as unfit to deal with the challenges facing the health care system, including high costs of care and the ongoing outbreak of H5N1.

But despite early outcry about his nomination, Kennedy's confirmation came as little surprise after he clinched a key Finance Committee vote last week from Health, Education, Labor and Pensions Chair Bill Cassidy, R-Louisiana, who previously expressed concerns about the advocacy.

In order to win Cassidy's support, Kennedy had, among other commitments, pledged to allow the Health, Education, Labor and Pensions Committee chair to weigh in on some staffing decisions at HHS.

But Sen. Patty Murray, D-Washington, said that she didn't believe that Kennedy would carry out that commitment. She warned Republicans against being pushed by the Trump administration to accept decisions they don't agree with.

"If you think RFK Jr. will change who he is, you are lying to yourself ... If you do not draw a line somewhere, you will cross every line you could ever imag-ine," she said. "You will be pushed further and further into accepting things you never thought you would — things you never thought you could."

trouble. He now needs more than a successful diamond finesse, because even if West has the queen and the diamonds are divided normally — that is, 3-2 — he still cannot make the slam. West would ruff the third or fourth round of diamonds and cash the queen of hearts to put the contract down one.

Declarer cannot accept an assumption that will surely lead to defeat, so he is forced to assume not only that West has the queen of diamonds, but also that West has four diamonds rather than two or three. That is the only hope he has to make the slam.

Accordingly, South starts by leading the eight of diamonds to the king at trick four (to guard against East holding the singleton ten or queen), then crosses to the ace of clubs and leads the nine of dia-

If West covers the nine with the ten, South finesses the jack, ruffs a club and then finesses the seven of diamonds to achieve the same result. Once South makes the proper assumption, West is helpless.

onship is a very lengthy affair; the winners normally play about 300 deals before they are finally crowned champions of the world. This minimizes the element of luck and magnifies the reward for skill, but, even so, the battle is sometimes so close that the outcome might be determined by a single deal. This hand occurred near the end of the 1980 world championship final between France and the United States. The French East-

West pair at the first table landed in six spades doubled, as shown. West went down one 200 points but it was a cheap price to pay considering that North almost surely would have made six clubs (worth 1,370 points). At the second table, where a U.S. pair held the East-West cards, the find the right lead to stop the grand slam. He did not know it at the time, but the outcome of the match depended on whether he chose a spade or a heart. Understandably, Hamman led the heart ace. He knew from the bidding that North-South together had at most one or two spades. He also knew that North-South almost certainly had more hearts than spades between them.

Jayden Comer of Jay County dribbles past Heritage's Taurean Brown during the second half Friday night. JCHS is now 9-8 and will be back at home tonight to take on Yorktown, which is 5-13 and last lost six in a row.

Heritage took control early thanks to some easy baskets as well as a 4-for-4 start from 3-point range. Jay County got back to within two on a threepoint play by Gradin Swoveland, only to have Davian Bates rain in a high-arcing 3-pointer as time expired in the first

The visiting Patriots took advantage of a technical foul on the JCHS bench in the third quarter, hitting both free throws and then cashing in a Lybarger 3-pointer on the ensuing possession. A defensive stop and a score by LanTae Cassel pushed their lead back to a dozen points.

"Basketball can be a funny game sometimes, a game of runs, ups and downs," said Sovine. "You've just got to kind of ride the wave is what we tell these guys. That was a big turning point in the game. ... I thought we took advantage of it."

Barnett entered the game for the first time in the fourth quarter and provided stable ball-handling and a defensive spark in addition to hitting his triple.

"He's had a good attitude this whole year,' said Gary of the sophomore. "His tenacity, that stuff's contagious.'

Lybarger led three players in double figures for Heritage as he made four 3-pointers en route to his 19 points. Cassel added 15 points and Taurean Brown scored 11. Braden Walter and Bates each added eight.
