District honors efforts

Drinkut, Kaiser earn awards for conservation

By RAY COONEY

The Commercial Review Farmers are typically honored for their various efforts at the Indiana State Fair each year. With the event canceled because of the ongoing coronavirus pandemic, that did not happen in 2020.

On Wednesday, a local organization made sure Jay County's honorees received their recognition.

Jay County Soil and Water Conservation District held its annual meeting Wednesday, honoring a pair of local farmers for their contributions to conservation best practices.

Betty Drinkut was honored as a River Family Farmer and Carl Kaiser was named Jay County Conservationist of the Year.

Bettie Jacobs, district coordinator, presented Drinkut with a "River Friendly Farmer of Indiana" sign for her farm, a certificate and other items that she would normally receive at the state fair. Drinkut, rural Pennville, is Homestead Century а owner who raises bees and provides a habitat for other pollinators through conservation programs.

"She loves her land," said Jacobs. "And in her words, 'I have grown up being taught the importance of sustainable thinking.

Drinkut, a retired Marion High School science teacher, took over operation of her family farm after the death of her father in 1982. Over the has tried to fol low in his footsteps as he had been considering putting some of his land into a Conservation Reserve Program. That area has now transformed from a tillable field with a waterway to become a wetland. "I simply tried to do what dad was doing — keep the water where it was supposed to be, keep the topsoil where it was supposed to be, provide a habitat for the wildlife and make use of things," said Drinkut.

Jay stays blue COVID cases plummet in February

By RAY COONEY The Commercial Review

Make it blue times two. Jay County was rated "blue" (minimal risk for the spread of coronavirus) for the second week in a row in the metrics Indiana State Department of Health updated Wednesday.

The county had been rated "yellow" (moderate) risk during the previous two weeks. It was at high or severe risk from Oct. 28 through Dec. 29.

Jay County stayed in the blue range as its COVID-19 numbers continued to decline in the metrics the state uses to determine the ratings. Its cases per 100,000 residents dipped to 34 from 63 the previous week, and its positivity rate fell to 2.24% from 4.73%.

The number of cases of COVID-19 locally have plummeted this month, coming in at just 2.3 per day as of Wednesday. That's down from 6.9 in January and the high of 22.8 in November. The county recorded no new cases Monday or Tuesday.

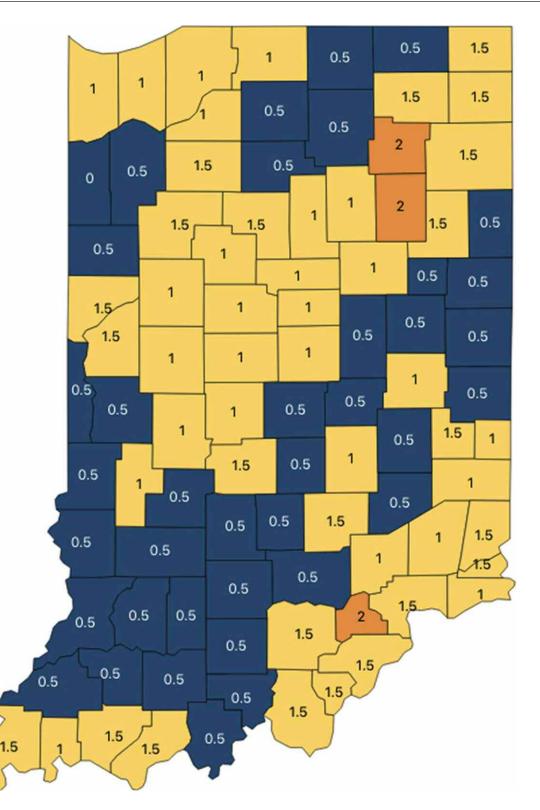

That pattern held true statewide as for the second consecutive week no counties were rated "red" (severe risk). Thirtyeight counties joined Jay with blue rankings, while 50 were yel-low and just three were orange (high risk).

Adams, Blackford, Delaware and Randolph counties were all rated blue this week. Wells County remained yellow. Indiana Gov. Eric Holcomb said Wednesday that despite the numbers moving in the right direction, he plans to extend the state's health emergency and restrictions for another 30 days.

'We have made remarkable progress in a relatively short period of time," he said. "But this is not a mission accomplished moment — far from it."

Jay County now has three vaccination clinics — at Jay County Health Department, IU Health Jay and Walmart. The vaccination at the health department runs from 11:15 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. on Tuesdays and Thursdays as well as 8:30 a.m. to 1:15 p.m. Saturdays, and the clinic at the hospital has appointments from 8:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays. As of Wednesday, 2,764 first doses of the coronavirus vaccine had been administered in Jay County. The total for Indiana was nearly 921,000. The state department of health on Monday extended appointments for vaccinations to make them available to Hoosiers 60 and older. Previously it was

Republicans rally against relief package

By ALAN FRAM Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Republicans rallied against Democrats' proposed $1.9 trillion COVID-19 relief bill as lawmakers awaited a decision by the Senate's parliamentarian that could bolster or kill a pivotal provision hiking the federal minimum wage.

Despite their paper-thin congressional majorities, Democratic leaders were poised to push the sweeping package through the House on Friday. They were hoping the Senate, where changes seem likely, would follow quickly enough to have legislation on President Joe Biden's desk by mid-March.

Bv late Wednesday, not one Republican in either chamber had publicly said he or she would back the legislation. GOP leaders were honing attacks on the package as a job killer that does too little to reopen schools or businesses shuttered for the coronavirus pandemic and that was not only wasteful but also even unscrupulous.

"I haven't seen a Republican yet that's found something in there that they agree with," said House Minority Leader Kevin McCarthy, R-Calif. "I think all Republicans believe in three simple things: They want a bill that puts us back to work, back to school and back to health. This bill is too costly, too corrupt and too liberal."

The hardening opposition suggested that Biden's first major legislative initiative could encounter unanimous GOP opposition

Among her goals were to improve the land, keep topsoil in place, give wildlife a place to live safely and provide a habitat for pollinators.

She said she hopes to pass on her knowledge about conservation to her children and grandchildren.

"I'm hoping I'm teaching them so that a 100-year farm can become a 150year farm," said Drinkut, whose land is at the northwest corner of county roads 750 West and 550 North.

Jordan Wall, a district supervisor, spoke about Kaiser, who was unable to attend the meeting Wednesday.

Kaiser was honored for the acres of woodland he has in conservation, providing a habitat for upland birds and bob white quail. He also has many other acres in conservation allowing native species to thrive.

'Kaiser is a true example of what conservation is," said Wall.

Also Wednesday, watershed coordinator Tim Kroeker gave an update on the various work he has done in the county since 2014. His efforts have included a pair of grants through the Federal Clean Water Act Section 319 and four Clean Water Indiana grants totaling nearly $900,000. He explained that each grant requires a local contribution in the form of dollars and/or volunteer hours and that Jay County's total in that area is $863,000.

"I think it speaks highly to water the Jay County Soil and Water Conservation District has been able to accomplish in six years," Kroeker said.

In other business:

•District supervisors Randy Fennig, who is appointed by the state, and Rick Imel, who was elected by the members, were sworn in by Jay County Commissioner Rex Journay.

Destroy barriers to remove poverty

By MORTON J. MARCUS

Poverty is a human issue with many dimensions including race, gender, occupation and geography. Its elimination is also multidimensional.

When not battling with minority members, the dominant Republicans in the Indiana House of Representatives might attend to the plight of 868,000 Hoosiers (13.4%) below the poverty threshold.

In the event it did not strike you, 868,000 in 2019 was about the same as the population of 43 Indiana counties combined.

Before we go further, consider those poverty thresholds which include numerous benefits such as Medicare, Medicaid, SNAP, Social Security, pensions, etc.

For a single person, under age 65, the threshold is income of $13,064. A college student, working half-time at $12.56 per hour, fits that description. Thus, Monroe and Delaware counties, with large college populations, lead the state with poverty in excess of 20%. Vigo and Tippecanoe counties are also college-impacted counties with large numbers of young, part-time workers.

Those four counties are but the poverty rate for the rates at or below 6%. This trio of among the top nine Indiana White population is only 11%. proximate prosperity have relacounties with poverty rates in excess of 17%. Switzerland and Crawford counties, in that same group, are traditional poverty geographically dislocales, opportunity. tanced from Fayette, Grant and Marion counties, also in the same group, are victims of major shifts in manufacturing.

For the household with one adult and one child, the threshold is $17,308. Two adults and two children, $25,465. How many of our state legislators can imagine living a full year, in this century, on so little income?

What is the color of poverty in Indiana? It's White; 70% of all Hoosiers in poverty are White, White population is only 11%.

Blacks or African Americans are 19% of those in poverty while constituting just 9% of the total population; the poverty rate for Blacks is 27%. The Hispanic or Latino populations of Indiana are 12% of those in poverty, but just 7% of all Hoosiers, with a 22%poverty rate.

Importantly for Whites, Blacks and Hispanics, the poverty rate is higher in Indiana than in the nation. Indiana matches the national poverty rate (13.4%) only because our Black and Hispanic populations are a lower percentage of the total than is the case nationally.

Boone counties have poverty cus@yahoo.com.

proximate prosperity have relatively small Black and Hispanic populations. However, in 36 of Indiana's 92 counties, the Black poverty rate is 33% or higher. A 33% poverty rate exists in 18 counties for Hispanic populations and in 16 counties for Asian populations.

What's to be done to eliminate poverty, not just ameliorate it? Destroy the historically accepted barriers to education, health, employment and housing that exist for so many in this "State that Works" for so few.

Couple thankful for workers, neighbors

To the editor:

It seems that every time you read the newspaper or watch TV, most of what you see is negative.

During the early part of January, despite the pre-cautions we took, Bill and I were diagnoses with COVID-19. We were admitted to IU Health Jay and I was transferred to IU Health Ball Memorial Hospital in Muncie. Bill was transferred to Persimmon Ridge Rehabilitation Centre.

We returned home to complete our isolation time and recovery.

During all this time we are blessed with neighbors Bonnie and Mike Foreman, who always made sure our sidewalk driveway were and cleared, that we always had everything we needed or wanted, and that we were OK. This included taking good care of Marmalade, our family cat. We will always be grateful to them for their kindness to

To the medical staff and health workers of IU Health Jay, IU Health Ball and Persimmon Ridge, our heartfelt thanks for the excellent care we received.

Yes, we know that in spite of the bad things we read about, we know that there is still good in our world. And we have much to be thankful for. Bill and Rose Fennig

Leaders can learn from Gorbachev

Bv KATRINA VANDEN HEUVEL

Special To The Washington Post 'What we urgently need now," former Soviet president Mikhail Gorbachev wrote last year, just a month after the COVID-19 pandemic ground life to a halt across the world, "is a rethinking of the entire concept of security." Rather than measure security purely in military terms, as we usually do, "the overriding goal must be human security: providing food, water and a clean environment and caring for people's health.'

Gorbachev, who celebrates his 90th birthday on March 2, was perhaps the most radical thinker about security to ever lead a major world power — and certainly the most radical to ever lead a nuclear country. As Soviet president, he reversed generations of perilous military buildup and democratized the Soviet Union to help put an end to the Cold War — a struggle that won him the Nobel Peace Prize. Since the end of his tenure, Gorbachev has continued to argue for new thinking about security, and recent events have vindicated his prescience. In the face of mounting global crises, today's leaders should heed three lessons Gorbachev has promoted for decades. First, militarization does not make us safer. As Soviet leader, Gorbachev saw firsthand how it instead often escalates the threat of violence by driving other countries to build up their militaries as well. These expensive investments divert resources from investments in basic needs such as health care and education that truly can deepen human security. Gorbachev, one of the most committed arms reductionists to ever lead a nuclear country, was revolutionary when in the 1980s he called for the complete abolition of nuclear weapons. Due in large part to his leadership, by 2015, 85 percent of the U.S. and Russian nuclear arsenals had been decommissioned from their Cold War-era heights.

increasingly under threat. Key arms treaties have been allowed to expire, and some nations, including the United States. Russia and China, are now modernizing their arsenals. The United States, for example, plans to order 600 new long-range missiles, each 20 times more powerful than the bomb dropped on Hiroshima. The total cost? $100 billion — $100 billion that, as Elisabeth Eaves of the Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists points out, could "pay 1.24 million elementary school teacher salaries for a year, provide 2.84 million fouryear university scholarships, or cover 3.3 million hospital stays for COVID-19 patients." We gain far greater security by investing in our civilization's health and well-being than by purchasing 600 new ways to destroy it. Gorbachev's second vital insight is that security starts with cooperation — even when that cooperation impossible. seems President Ronald Reagan famously called the Soviet Union an "evil empire." That initial position would deter many in Gorbachev's position from even attempting to open a dialogue. But, as I have often heard Gorbachev say in gatherings over the years, "if we don't attempt what seems impossible, we will risk fac-ing the unthinkable." So he persevered — and, eventually, both leaders came to see that no one could win the Cold War. As Gorbachev put it, "We only won when the Cold War ended." The improbable partnership with Reagan made the entire world safer.

ens the planet itself. The Biden administration rejoining the World Health Organization and the Paris climate accord and, hopefully, signing back onto the Iran nuclear deal are important steps.

Finally, Gorbachev reminds us that one of the best ways to safeguard our national security is to preserve and advance our democratic institutions. Gorbachev showed how even leaders who emerge from authoritarian systems can implement key reforms that promote democracy. From 1985, when he came to power, Gorbachev introduced presidential and parliamentary elections that remain the freest, fairest elections in Russia's history. His signature policy of glasnost — or openness — rolled back seven decades of government censorship. He even invested in independent journalism, committing part of his Nobel Prize money to Novaya Gazeta, the country's leading democratic opposition paper that continues to publish important investigative reporting. But, here too, Gorbachev's vision remains tragically unfulfilled. The Russian leaders who followed him, including Boris Yeltsin, who used tanks in 1993 to disband and destroy Russia's most freely elected parliament, rolled back many of his reforms. That de-democratization has worsened under Vladimir Putin, as evidenced by the recent jailing of anti-corruption critic Alexei Navalny. And, in recent years, anti-democratic and authoritarian practices have been on the rise in countries around the world, including in the United States. It has been 30 years since Gorbachev left power. But his fundamental insight that true security can better be achieved through demilitarization, cooperation and democratization is even more true today, when the threats to our security come in more forms than ever. Understanding this new security reality is not idealism. It is realism.

South Bend legislators are successful.

The bills, authored by Reps. Ryan Dvorak and Maureen Bauer, address "forever chemicals," a family of toxic chemicals found in everything from fabrics to food service containers. They don't break down naturally and they've been found in drinking water in Indiana.

Dvorak's bill would establish a maximum contaminant level for per- and polyfluoroalkyl substances (PFAS) in state drinking water, a measure already adopted by at least six other states. Bauer's bill would test PFAS levels in current and former military members. Use of the chemicals in the military's firefighting foam has allowed the toxins to flow through the water and into the ground.

Experts say national regulation is needed to address the contamination.

Linda Lee, an agronomy professor at Purdue University, said that action from the states could "trickle effort. down" to the rest of the country — and the more itive steps for a state whose that states take the lead on the issue, the more likely that widespread nationwide change will occur.

saying that there should be a maximum contaminant level for PFAS, while leaving what the maximum level is to scientists. Five military sites in Indiana have been confirmed to discharge the toxins through its firefighting foam, and Bauer said it's important for the state to understand the impact such discharge could have had on Indiana service members.

Last year, a bill that would require reducing the use of the firefighting foam training exercises in passed with strong support Democrats from and Republicans. That seems a sign that the issue can garner bipartisan support and can be applied to the military. The American Chemistry Council, which represents manufacturing companies and has helped enact similar legislation to reduce PFAS chemicals in firefighting foams, has advocated for letting the EPA lead the regulation

Exotic extremes

A Père David's deer on Valkyrie Ranch in Texas survived last week's freezing temperatures. Many exotic animals in the state did not. "We have over $2 million in animals that have been lost, and another half-million in damage to infrastructure," said Charly Seale, president of the Exotic Wildlife Association in Kerrville, Texas. "It's an extremely trying time for all of us."

Continued from page 1 That was a counterpoint to the new president's refrain during his campaign about bringing the country together and a replay of the Republican wall that new President Barack Obama encountered in 2009 and most of his administration.

Democrats showed no signs of backing down, citing the assistance the measure would spread to people, businesses and state and local governments.

"If congressional Republicans want to oppose all that, my response is: Good luck." Senate Majority Leader Chuck Schumer, D-New York, said on the Senate floor.

By Wednesday evening, the most suspense was over a decision anticipated from Elizabeth MacDonough, the Senate's nonpartisan arbiter of its rules, that promised enormous political and legislative an hour. The parliamentarian is it dialed back. That suggests gruelinvolved because Democrats are pushing the overall $1.9 trillion measure through Congress under special rules that will let them avoid a Senate filibuster by Republicans.

Those same rules prohibit provisions with only an "incidental" impact on the federal budget because they are chiefly driven by other policy purposes. The parlia-mentarian decides if a provision passes that test.

With Republicans strongly against a minimum wage increase, the only way for it to survive is by including it in a filibuster-proof bill like the COVID-19 relief measure. To end a filibuster, Democrats would need 60 votes, an impossibility for them in the evenly divided 50-50 Senate.

If the parliamentarian decides the minimum wage provision can remain in the bill, it would be a

ing bargaining on its final form would lie ahead

A decision by the parliamentarian that the minimum wage hike must fall from the bill could be fatal, but not necessarily. Democrats could employ a rarely used procedural move to muscle the minimum wage provision into the bill with just 51 votes anyway, but it was unclear if they could muster enough support to do that.

The minimum wage has stood at $7.25 since 2009. Winning the increase is a top priority for progressives at a time when Democrats control Congress and the White House.

The overall bill would provide millions of Americans with $1,400 direct payments to help them weather the pandemic that's stalled much of the economy for a ple. In a sign of hardball politics ahead, top Republicans suggested that House Speaker Nancy Pelosi. D-Calif., and Schumer squeezed money into the bill for their own states.

McCarthy said the bill had $100 million to help extend the San Francisco area's BART commuter rail system south to San Jose. That project was approved previously by the Trump administration and is not in Pelosi's San Francisco district, a top Democratic aide said.

McCarthy and Senate Minority Leader Mitch McConnell, R-Kentucky, suggested Schumer had won money for a bridge connecting upstate New York to Canada. Project unclear at Israeli facility

By JON GAMBRELL sociated Press

DUBAI, United Arab Emirates — A secretive Israeli nuclear facility at the center of the nation's undeclared atomic weapons program is undergoing what appears to be its biggest construction project in decades, satellite photos analyzed by The Associated Press show.

A dig about the size of a soccer field and likely several stories deep now sits just yards from the aging reactor at the Shimon Peres Negev Nuclear Research Center near Dimona. The facility is already home to decades-old underground laboratories that reprocess the reactor's spent rods to obtain weapons-grade plutonium for Israel's nuclear bomb program.

What the construction is for, however, remains unclear. The Israeli government did not respond to detailed questions from the AP about the work. Under its policy of nuclear ambiguity, Israel neither confirms nor denies having atomic weapons. It is among just four countries that have never joined the Non-Proliferation Treaty, a landmark international accord meant to stop the spread of nuclear arms.

The construction comes as Israel — under Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu — maintains its scathing criticism of Iran's nuclear program, which remains under the watch of United Nations inspectors unlike its own. That has renewed calls among experts for Israel to publicly declare details of its program.

What "the Israeli government is doing at this secret nuclear weapons plant is something for the Israeli government to come clean about," said Daryl G. Kimball, executive director of the Washington-based Arms Control Association.

With French assistance, Israel began secretly building the nuclear site in the late 1950s in empty desert itary purpose of the site for Israel's chief ally, even referring to it as a textile factory.

Warriors use late run to pull past Pacers

INDIANAPOLIS — With Stephen Curry struggling to make baskets, Draymond Green gave Golden State a boost of energy.

The Warriors needed everything he could muster.

Green scored on two late dunks to start the decisive final run, defended hard and found a way to corral loose balls in the closing minutes as Golden State scored six straight points to finally fend off the Indiana Pacers 111-107 on Wednesday night.

"I think in general we don't really need Draymond to score," coach Steve Kerr said. "We need him to do what he needs energy wise but there are going to be some nights like tonight where we don't make a lot of shots and if we get a few from Draymond it might put us over the top."

Green certainly bailed out the weary Warriors, who won the last two games on a four-game road trip.

His numbers — 12 points, 11 assists, nine short of becoming the rebounds and three steals - only told part of the tale history with 6,000. The Warriors failed to take advantage of earlier opportunities to take control of the back-and-forth contest.

the Pacers Instead, fought back from an 81-75 deficit late in the third quarter to tie the score at 86 early in the fourth. And after Golden State scored four straight to take a 95-91 lead midway through the fourth, the Pacers got as close as 99-98 with 4:36 to play.

That's when Green drove through the lane for an uncontested dunk to start the decisive run, and the Pacers never recovered.
