County shifts back to yellow By RAY COONEY

The Commercial Review

After five straight weeks at "blue," Jay County ticked back up a notch in the state's coronavirus metrics.

Jay County was rated "yellow" (moderate risk for the spread of coronavirus) in the Indiana State Depart-ment of Health update released Wednesday.

The county's rating moved because of an increase in its positivity rate. The local rate jumped to 5.59% this week. up from 2.7% the previous week. It had been as low as 1.87% last month.

Jay County's cases per 100,000 residents stayed relatively stable, coming in at 63 this week after sitting at 68 last week. It had been as low was 23 in the March 3 update.

Heath Butz, environmentalist and administrator for Jay County Health Department, noted a recent increase in cases. There has been at least one new case in Jay County each of the last 11 days, with 19 in the seven days.

As of last week, the county was averaging 1.63 new cases per day in March. That number is now up to 1.96

"We need to be mindful of what we're doing because we have had a few more cases of late," said Butz. "So we're seeing little fluctuations. And if you look to our neighbor, Blackford, they had a spike in cases last week. ... I think it goes to show we need to keep mindful of those measures that have helped to get us where we area." Blackford County was the only of the 92 in the state to be rated orange (high risk) this week, with 25 counties yellow and 66 blue (low risk). (Its positivity rate jumped to 13.7% and its cases per 100,000 residents was 348.) Wells County was yellow for the second consecutive week while Adams, Delaware and Randolph counties were all blue.

Portland is considering a new idea for mitigating downtown flooding.

Indianapolis-based Wessler Engineering on Wednesday presented its findings and proposed solution for flooding in downtown Portland to local officials, including representatives from the city's board of works and council.

Boggs explained he was neering, downtown area, an issue that has been discussed for about a decade. Various studies, including two by Jones and Henry and one each by Butler, Fairman and Seufert, MLS Engineering and the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, have looked at local flooding in the last six years.

Boggs said he appreci-Portland Mayor John ated that Wessler Engiа

"I knew then that Wessler was the firm that I wanted to come in, do the study and offer the solution for us," he said.

The problem

As described by Wessler senior project manager Bill Leber, water changes were made to streets) flow into a north-part of an Indiana Department of Transportation project in the mid 1990s.

The old 24-inch pipe that runs down Meridian Street is now unused. Instead, the section of the street from the Salamonie River to Votaw Street is essentially five separate systems.

Catch basins between the river and brick allev (between Water and Main directly to the river. The next four systems of catch basins — each covering about a block and a half between Main and Votaw streets — all are diverted east to Miller's Branch along Walnut, High, Arch and North streets. Millers Branch is a 72-inch corrugated pipe that runs roughly along the north-south alley between Main and Harrison streets.

AstraZeneca updates data

AstraZeneca insists that its COVID-19 vaccine is strongly effective even after counting additional illnesses in its U.S. study, the latest in an extraordinary public dispute with American officials.

In a late-night news release Wednesday, the drugmaker said it had analyzed more data from that study and concluded the vaccine is 76% effective in preventing symptomatic COVID-19, instead of the 79% it had reported earlier in the week.

Just a day earlier, an independent panel that oversees the study had accused AstraZeneca of cherry-picking data to tout the protection offered by its vaccine. The panel, in a harsh letter to the company and to U.S. health leaders, said the company had left out some

Some experts said the new data provided by AstraZeneca was "reassuring" and the information was likely solid enough for U.S. regulators to authorize the vaccine.

"AstraZeneca may have just been too hasty in submitting the earlier, incomplete interim analysis rather than waiting to analyze and submit the full dataset," said Julian Tang, a virologist at the University of Leicester who was not connected to the research. Data disputes during ongoing studies typically remain confidential but in an unusual step, the National Institutes of Health publicly called on AstraZeneca to fix the discrepancy.

AstraZeneca had been counting on findings from a predominantly U.S. study of 32,000 people to help rebuild confidence in a vaccine that, despite being widely used in Britain, Europe and other countries, has had a troubled roll-of county road 100 North and west of Morton Street to hold back water during heavy rains. (Boggs said this project would still be under consideration in an effort to further take pressure off of Millers Branch.)

Jay County surveyor Brad Daniels agreed that pressure needs to be taken off of Millers Branch, but also said repeatedly during the meeting he feels his department's efforts to clean out the area of the river from the eastern city limits to Indiana 67 have made a significant impact. He said the city had once contracted for such work, but none had been done for about five years prior to the 2011 flood that caused millions of dollars in damage.

What's next

The next step toward the Wessler Engineering project, or any of the proposed solutions, is to secure funding

Laying out potential funding sources Wednesday, Wessler mentioned local bonds, a state Community Development Block Grant, a loan from the State Revolving Loan Fund and a long or grant for infrastructure projects through Indiana Finance Authority as possibilities.

Boggs said a downtown sewer project would fall under the purview of the city's board of works but he would also want Portland City Council's blessing. (Council could also be involved in the funding process.)

That additional water flowing through Millers Branch is overloading the pipe and, when the Salamonie River is too high, causing water to flow back up through the catch basins and onto Meridian Street.

'(Millers Branch) drains basically half of the town," said Leber. "Everything from the east comes over and all the way north even beyond the town all comes through there.

"When you've got a drainage area that's measured in square miles, it doesn't take too much to fill that pipe."

Boggs and representatives from Wessler discussed the issue with INDOT.

'They were sympathetic ... but declined to help in any way financially," said Boggs.

The history

Downtown flooding jumped to the forefront in 2011 when snow melt from a winter storm followed by several days of steady rain put Portland underwater. By noon Feb. 28, the Salamonie River had risen over its banks and flooded both sides of the river and putting dozens of blocks of the city under water.

The downtown area of the city was under water again in late 2013 after more than 4 inches of rain fell over the Dec. 21-22 weekend.

And then in 2015, Meridian Street in downtown Portland was closed three times in less than a month. The worst of those came July 14 - it rivaled the Feb. 28, 2011 flood — and drew a visit from then-Indiana Gov. Mike Pence. (Meridian Street in the downtown area was also under water June 17 and June 27 that year.) According to the National Weather Service, 21.75 inches of rain fell between June 1 and July 15, 2015. The annual average for Jay County was 20.66 inches.

Proposed solution

Wessler's idea for mitigating the downtown flooding issues, which have been most predominant between Main and Race streets over the last 10 years, is to run a new storm sewer line. It would be 36 inches in diameter beginning between Arch and Race streets and then expand to 42 inches at High Street, continuing south to the Salamonie River.

The new line (about 2,000 feet long) would be used to drain three of the Meridian Street catch basin systems — those that currently drain the area between Main and North streets. The

The project is designed to eliminate problems during what is referred to as "10-year-flood."

The construction cost for such a project is estimated at $1.3 million.

Other ideas

The proposal for a new sewer line along Meridian Street is the latest potential solution presented to local officials.

Previous studies have resulted in a variety of other ideas:

•Reconnecting the old 24-inch Meridian Street line. (Wessler looked at this possibility but said the line is too small and would require significant repairs.)

 Convincing Norfolk and Southern Railway to remove its unused railroad trestle that disrupts the flow of water in the Salamonie River.

•Running a 40-foot-wide open ditch (or a buried pipe) through Jay County Fairgrounds and to the east of the city to divert water from Millers Branch.

•Building a detention pond south do or die."

to resurface U.S. 27 (Meridian Street) in Portland during the summer of 2023. Once that project is complete, the state agency would not allow any drainage project on the street for 10 years after the work is complete.

"So we either do it by the summer of '23 or we suffer what we have for the economy of downtown Portland for the next 10 years." (The Wessler project would need to be complete about six months before the INDOT resurfacing to allow the ground to settle.)

Barry Hudson, a retired banker, former county commissioner and member of the local flood advisory committee, urged action. He noted that over several decades he's been trying to get businesses to locate in downtown Portland.

"Unless we start some of these projects ... I guarantee you that downtown Portland will go away ... because the people will not come in these buildings," he said.

"It's a lot of money, but it's either

Inkblots inspire Indiana exhibit

By LISA TRIGG Tribune-Star

TERRE HAUTE, Ind. (AP) — What might this be?

That's a basic question asked of people taking a Rorschach inkblot test.

The same question could be asked for the Psychodiagnostik exhibit on display through May 9 at the Swope Art Museum in Terre Haute.

Psychodiagnostik celebrates the 100th anniversary of the Rorschach Test by presenting abstract art in the Swope's permanent collection.

While the works in the exhibit are not actual inkblots from the test, they are abstract and ask the observer what can be seen in the art.

"After 100 years of use, the Rorschach test is still one of the most researched measures of personality," said Edward Trover, the Swope's curator of collections and exhibitions.

"The inkblots abstract paintings in their own right. Using the framework of the test, expressing what you see in other works of abstract art can show more of yourself than your conscious self can see, in turn giving better insights into underlying motivations of your thoughts." and

The test was created by Swiss psychiatrist Hermann Rorschach and released in 1921 in his book "Psychodiagnostik." The book contained the results of Rorschach studies on patients, and 10 inkblot cards became the foundation of that test.

Dr. Elizabeth O'Laughlin, a licensed psychologist and professor at Indiana State University, has been teaching a course on the Rorschach test since 1995. It remains a valuable assessment tool for people with personality disorders, she said.

Man is worried about future relationships

DEAR ABBY: I am a faithful male reader of your column. I lost my beautiful wife of 40 years last vear.

During our marriage, I had prostate cancer and decided to have the surgery to remove it. I was told by my doctor that there was a chance I would never again be intimate with my wife, and she was OK with it. Now that she's gone, I have grown close to her childhood best friend. I don't like to hang out with large groups of people because I'm afraid of big groups, but I still want to be friends with her. When I told her I'd think about it, she suddenly turned cold. I'm confused. I don't know what I should do. Turn down the rezoning request

To the editor:

We are not in favor of the location that U.S. Aggregates is planning for the stone quarry.

We live out on Oak Street. We are not against any new development in the City of Portland or Jay County.

There will be blasting involved. We or no one else would want to buy a house near the site. The property values will go down.

If a new industry would go on the site, our property values probably would not go down. But a stone quarry is a completely different Ellsworth story because of blasting.

Letters to the Editor

It would be one big hole, stopping any development in the future of Portland in that area.

We would like for the plan commission to please turn down U.S. Aggregates' request for rezoning.

When will roads meet our needs?

By MORTON J. MARCUS

U.S. Sen. Lamar Alexander (R-Tennessee) has retired after 18 years of service.

On leaving the Senate, he said, "Lately, the Senate has been like joining the Grand Ole Opry and not being allowed to sing.

His record in the Senate. and previously as governor of Tennessee (1979-87), was informed by walking 1,022 miles across the state in his 1978 campaign for governor. He saw that poverty was related to dreadful road conditions. If getting somewhere is a chore and getting services and visitors to your town is difficult, poverty is reinforced by the highways. He proposed linking each of the state's 95 county seats by four lane highways to the nearest Interstate.

It's a thought that ought to be considered by Indiana's moribund legislature.

It took generations to get U.S. 31 from Indianapolis to South Bend upgraded to four lanes and only recently has partial, additional modernization been completed.

Similarly, how many had to die on Indiana 37 from Indianapolis to Bloomington? In 1970, the four-lane route was still incomplete, still opposed by many in Bloomington. Now, 51 years later, Interstate 69, over that same route, is still incomplete, still opposed by many in Bloomington.

lane Indiana 26 to Interstate 69?

How can we expect Connersville and Fayette County to prosper without a serious upgrade of Indiana 1 to Interstate 70? When will Jasper have safer access to Interstate 64, yea verily unto Interstate 69?

Four-lane connectivity is not a guarantee of economic development. U.S. 41 and Interstate 64 give some evidence of that truth. But we lack even sufficient Super-2 roads, those wider, safer two-lane routes for commuters and truckers.

With more and more delivery vans fanning out across Indiana to homes and businesses, we have more and more warehouses stocked by larger and heavier trucks. For these services, many of our state and most of our county roads are inadequate.

Many familiar with Indiana's history dwell on the canal "failures" of the mid-19th century. Yet, had Indiana completed its canals as planned, Toledo might have preceded Chicago as the great city of the Midwest entire and altered the dynamic of our region. We could wait until all the changes expected of the internet and the electrification of vehicular traffic are realized. After all, there's no reason to spend a dollar today and have our greatgrandchildren laugh at our investment "errors." Indiana can make choices today to shape tomorrow or we can let the world proceed without our participation, leaving us in a perpetual state of catch-up. •••••

Effort in Iowa is undemocratic

By HENRY OLSEN Special To The Washington Post

House Democrats are seriously considering unseating Rep. Mariannette Miller-Meeks, an Iowa Republican, and replacing her with the woman she defeated in November, state Sen. Rita Hart. That power play would show Democrats to be exactly what many Republicans think they are: a party devoted more to holding power than protecting democracy.

Miller-Meeks won her seat by a mere six votes in November. Hart called for a recount after unofficial results showed her behind by 47 votes, and the 24 counties in the district assembled the legally mandated bipartisan boards to oversee the effort. That count cut into the Republican's lead but did not overturn it. The Iowa Board of Canvass unanimously certified her election on Nov. 30, and Miller-Meeks was sworn in as a member of Congress on Jan. 3.

This should have been the end of it. As Democrats kept reminding us during the stupid and futile efforts by former president Donald Trump to overturn his election defeat, democracy's legal procedures protect all Americans against politicians using their power to overturn election results they don't like. Those procedures showed Miller-Meeks won, and Hart had bypassed her ability to appeal the Canvass Board's decision in Iowa state court, ending her ability to contest the election before a neutral judge. Case closed, right? Wrong. Hart has appealed to the House itself, controlled by her own party, and asked it to conduct its own investigation into the race. She contends that the recount boards improperly excluded 22 ballots that would have given her the victory had they been counted. Notwithstanding the fact that she could have made those claims before an Iowa court, she chose to Henry Olsen invoke the rarely used Federal Contested Elections Act to press them before her own party. The House Administration Committee voted last week along partisan lines to consider Hart's challenge and launch its own investigation.

Republicans are rightly afraid that this will lead to Democrats taking the seat away from Miller-Meeks and giving it to Hart. They cite the legendary example of the 1985 recount over Indiana's 8th Congressional District. In that race, Republican Richard McIntyre was certified as the winner by 34 votes, but his Democratic opponent, Frank McCloskey, challenged the result before the House. Democrats refused to swear McIntyre in and replaced him with McCloskev after a three-member board - two Democrats and one Republican — "found" that McCloskey had won. The House then voted to back the board's decision on a largely partisan vote, though the move was so egregious that 10 Democrats joined every Republican to vote against it. Republicans similarly felt that Democrats stole a legitimate victory in the 2004 Washington gubernatorial race, when Republican Dino Rossi was ahead of Democrat Christine Gregoire by 261 votes in unofficial but final results. An automatic machine recount found that Rossi was still ahead by 42 votes. Democrats then paid for a hand recount, and went to court to force election officials to count ballots that had been previously rejected. This included more than 500 absentee ballots that were discovered in King County, the state's Democratic bastion, weeks after the election. This recount put Gregoire ahead. She took office, but nearly 20 years later, state Republicans still believe they were robbed.

The hypocrisy on display in the Iowa case is stunning. Just two months ago, Democrats thundered that the call from Sen. Ted Cruz, R-Texas, for a commission to look into the 2020 presidential election was seditious. Cruz's proposal would have enabled Republicancontrolled state legislatures to "change in their vote" based on commission's findings. the Because Republicans control the legislature in every close state the Trump campaign was contesting, this was an open invitation for one party to overturn the election results based on its perceived selfinterest. How is what the House Democrats are considering any different?

Continuing down this path would turn the partisan tensions in this country up to 11. Republican media would surely make the issue the object of their ire for months, noting in every opportunity how inconsistent such an act would be with Democratic rhetoric in the post-election ruckus. Such an argument would not be contained to the rightward elements of the media, either. The House has not unseated a sworn-in member due to an election challenge since 1938. Doing it now, and in the wake of the tumultuous 2020 election, would be national news and a big 2022 election issue. Republicans can take heart from that earlier example, though. The Republican unseated by the Democratic majority then clearly won election in the 1938 midterms. while the GOP gained 81 House seats. If Democrats rob Miller-Meeks today, past may be prologue. •••••

That's how we make progress in Indiana, a halfcentury at a time.

We've seen the value of connecting Valparaiso via four-lane Indiana 49 to Interestate 80/90 and Interstate 94 in Porter County. In like fashion, wouldn't residents and businesses of Frankfort and Clinton County benefit from a complete four-lane Indiana 28 to Interstate 65? Wouldn't Portland and Winchester gain from a four-lane U.S. 27 to Interstate 70 at Richmond? Hartford City a four-

The bidding: West North East South Pass 1 NT $2 \spadesuit 4 \checkmark$ Opening lead — ten of clubs. Winning players seem to have much more luck than those who are less successful. This, of course, is not true. Over a period of time, luck is distributed evenly for everyone. The bir difference, though is that those big difference, though, is that those who win are better at taking advan-tage of good fortune when it arises.

Consider this deal from a team-offour contest where both North-South pairs reached four hearts. At the first table, the club ten was covered by the king and ace, and South ruffed East's club continuation. He then played the A-K of trump, ruffed dummy's has that avachful cyc and realized that if he played low on the ace of spades, he would next be thrown into the lead with the king. This would force him to return a diamond into dummy's A-Q or else yield a ruff-and-discard by returning a club. Either way, South would gain his 10th trick. And so, when the ace of pades was played, East dropped his

At the other tance, the page of the same, first two tricks was exactly the same, but this time declarer led a spade to the ace at trick three. This made it the ace at trick three. This made it very difficult for East — who had far less information at his disposal than his counterpart at the first table --- to ins connerpart at the first able — to get rid of the king, and in practice he simply followed low. South then drew trump and ruffed a club before exiting with a spade to East's king to make his contract.

There is no question that some luck was needed to make four hearts on this deal, but an equal measure of skill also was required to take full advantage of it.

Pacers snap losing skid

INDIANAPOLIS Caris LeVert's transition 18 points off the bench and to fitting in with the Indiana Pacers was delayed two months by kidney surgery to remove a cancerous mass.

Acquired in a threeteam trade on Jan. 16 that involved All-Stars James Harden and Victor Oladipo, LeVert didn't play again until just recently.

His seventh Pacers start was his best yet with 28 points in a 116-111 victory over the Detroit Pistons on Wednesday night.

"I felt like I've tried to be aggressive from day one," LeVert said, "but it takes time.'

LeVert's fourth 3-pointer with 4.7 seconds remaining enabled the Pacers to snap a six-game home losing streak.

"Very big shot," Pacers coach Nate Bjorkgren said. "His legs are getting under him more and more each day.

It's the first time LeVert has surpassed 20 points with his new team.

"I love fourth quarters. I love big moments," he said. "Every win is important for us right now as we try to make the playoffs."

The Pacers (20-23) ended their worst winless stretch at home since losing six in a row in 1985. The Pistons Dwane Casey said.

16 for the Pacers. Jerami Grant led the Pistons with 29 points. Saddiq Bey and Wayne Ellington each scored 16.

Levert accounted for the Pacers' last eight points of the first half for a 57-51 lead. The guard scored 15 of 17 first-half points in the second quarter.

The Pistons committed nine of their 15 turnovers in the second quarter to continue a seasonal trend of erratic ballhandling. That meant playing catchup in the second half.

"This is about execution and making the easy pass," Bey said.

The Pistons rallied to cut the deficit to 78-76 with 2:15 remaining in the third, but the Pacers bench responded as reserves George Bitadze and Jeremy Lamb sank 3-pointers. The Pacers finished the quarter with an 86-79 lead.

The Pistons tied the game at 92 on an Ellington jumper with 8:23 remaining.

Detroit had a chance to tie or go ahead in the final minute, but Delon Wright committed a turnover.

"At the end of the game, again, we had an untimely turnover," Pistons coach
