Walgreens is shutting down its Portland site

By RAY COONEY The Commercial Review

A Portland convenience store and pharmacy will be closing next month.

The Walgreens location at 124 W. Votaw St. will close Nov. 16.

The company confirmed the closure via email late Friday afternoon. No additional details were provid-

2019, Walgreens announced plans to close 200 U.S. locations by 2022. The stated goal at that time was to save about $1.5 billion in annual expenses.

On Monday, The Craig Daily Press confirmed that the Walgreen's location in Craig, Colorado, would be closing. Its final day is also set for Nov. 16.

"We have made the difficult decision to close this location," Walgreens senior director of external relations Fraser Engerman, who also confirmed the Portland closure to The Commercial Review, told The Craig Daily Press. "There are a number of factors that we take into consideration including dynamics of the local market and changing buying habits of our customers."

week, a Jay County town was recognized for its historical significance.

The Oct. 16, 1992, edition of The Commercial Review featured a story about a section of downtown Redkey being placed on the National Register of Historic Places.

It was the first historic district in Jay County to be recognized.

Redkey Historic District — a section of High Street between Oak and Meridian streets — represents commercial development in the town between 1888 and 1935.

At the time it was named to the register it was the focus of a major downtown revitalization project led by Historic Redkey Inc. and with national register made County Fairgrounds.

Redkey Historic District's application was approved about six weeks after the nomination received the OK from Indiana State Historic Preservation Review Board. Historic Redkey Inc. and Redkey Town Council members had spent about two years working to get the town's historic district on the National Register of Historic Places. That included a $1,500 grant from Indiana Department of Natural Resources to prepare the nomination. Laura Thayer, a Columbus architectural historian, researched and wrote the application.

Thirty years ago this assistance from a state Redkev Historic District eligible for federal matching grants to be used to restore or preserve historic buildings. Owners could also receive tax benefits for commercial properties.

State officials said the Redkey district had a high degree of architectural integrity, with 25 of the 30 buildings including having architectural significance. Architectural styles featured included Italianate, Romanesque and Neo-classical.

When Redkey's district was recognized, Headwaters, Heritage Inc. was working on a nomination for a section of downtown Portland that included Jay County Courthouse Being included on the and Floral Hall at Jay

pastor Tom Fett. That's when Myers proposed they create a safe space for domestic violence victims. Some time ago, she said, a friend of hers had been hospitalized for injuries sustained in a domestic violence incident. She recalled her friend having few places to turn for help. The event spurred Myers to brainstorm ways to help others who had experienced similar situations. She said surrounding larger cities, such as Muncie, have more resources available to victims of domestic violence, but it's never enough. "When you look at supply and demand, it's not met," she said.

She toyed with the idea of purchasing abandoned houses and turning them into transitional homes

And with the new buildings the church had acquired, plans quickly clicked into place.

Myers helped develop a vision for the future of the former parsonage and church — they are located in a rural area between Jay and Blackford counties — to aid those impacted by domestic violence.

"I feel like Cat had ... a fire in her belly, I tell ya, and everybody felt that passion as she shared her vision for this, and everybody just got on board," said Fett.

Planning started at the beginning of February. New Hope Nazarene Ministry Center became a registered non-profit organization in March. In the ensuing months, the group started renovations to the nearby house.

The Portland Foundation awarded New Hope Nazarene Ministry Center $7,000 for house repairs, lawn services and a security system. Blackford County Commissioners also contributed $3,000 toward liability insurance.

Renovations were completed in late August. New Hope Nazarene Ministry Center installed a full security system, complete with cameras, keypad locks and Ring doorbells. The exterior got new siding and the weathered windows and doors were replaced.

Community members have donated funds and multiple area food pantries, churches and thrift stores, as well as Dollar General, have contributed canned goods, clothes, toiletries and other items for the cause.

"It's been overwhelming at times," Myers said, choking back tears. "It's just been an abundance of people coming out of the woodworks.

Most of the interior had been renovated previously, Myers noted. The house has been filled with donated furniture and other supplies. It includes a kitchen, three bedrooms — one with a single bed, one with two twin-sized beds and one with a bunk bed and crib — a living room, an office and storage closets.

"Now it's livable and usable," said Fett. "We're excited about the opportunity of someone going in there to begin their life change.

Part of the New Hope Ministry Center's future plans include converting the former church into an emergency shelter for women and children. Myers' husband, Nick, an engineer, has drawn floor schematics in hopes of renovating the building. Plans call for four living units, three bathrooms, daycare services, a utility room and a community room with a living area and a kitchen.

The shelter would offer a mentorship program to build life skills depending on the person's needs. Options could include cooking or computer classes, or training on specific items such as building a resume.

"Anytime you're dealing with a domestic violence situation, you're looking at someone being completely stripped of their independence," Myers explained. "So that can start as early as not having a driver's license, not having employment, not having a car ... so we want to see where these women have started at and help them build and get their self-worth back."

The facility's services would include 24-hour care and 24-hour security.

Myers said the organization is applying for federal grants for domestic violence prevention as well as the IU Health Foundation Community Impact Grant in order to secure funding for the operation.

In mid September, the organization reached out to Muncie Mission, Jayland Homeless Shelter and other facilities to offer their location to those who are ready for transitional living. Plans are for the first tenants to move in soon.

Myers' main goal with the ministry is to give hope to those who are struggling.

"It doesn't matter where you're at or what support you have, there is a hope," Myers said. "And we want to provide that new hope to these women and these children.'

DOJ condemns master review

By SARAH D. WIRE

Los Angeles Times Tribune News Service

WASHINGTON — A special master review of documents taken from former President Donald Trump's Mar-a-Lago estate should not have been approved, the Department of Justice argued in its first filing in the appeal to the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Atlanta.

The department is asking the court to overturn U.S. District Judge Aileen Cannon's decision to appoint a special master to the Aug. 8 search of the Florida property by the FBI, and block the department from using any of the documents for its investigation until the monthslong process ends.

The appellate court has agreed to expedite consideration of the case. Trump's lawyers must file their response by Nov. 10.

The department argued in its filing that Cannon should not have even entertained appointing a special master because Trump ing that the government showed a "callous disregard" for his rights in executing the court-approved search of the property, a fact she acknowledged in her order granting the special master. Cannon said that Trump met the other standards required of him in the matter.

The district court accordrecords retrieved during for doing so, namely provingly determined that Plaintiff had demonstrated no 'callous disregard' of his rights," the filing states, noting that the 11th Circuit pointed that out in an early decision in this case. "And as the (11th Circuit) Court held, that by itself is sufficient reason to conclude that the district court erred in exercising jurisdiction over this action." In the filing, the department states that the recovered documents are "the very objects" of an "ongoing "the very criminal investigation."

policy, This new announced by Mayor Lori Lightfoot late last month. is something that the federal government tried and failed to do with the Build Back Better Act — and something it should try again.

Many countries offer this kind of leave, and although a handful of states and cities in the U.S. have passed family leave and paternity leave laws, it is not good enough. The Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development, a global policy forum, placed the U.S. dead last among its member countries in a summary of parental leave laws in 2018.

It is especially encouraging that these policies include mothers and fathers — as study after study shows the importance of fathers in their children's lives, and study after study shows the benefits of paternal involvement in those vital first

Under Chicago's policy, a city employee is eligible if the person has been working for the city for at least a year before taking the leave and has worked at least 1,250 hours during those 12 months. The new policy evolved from contract talks between the city and the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, according to news reports. Federal lawmakers put forth a similar plan in the early drafts of the Build Back Better Act last year that would have allowed each parent working for any employer in the U.S. to take four weeks of paid leave after the birth of a child. By MICHAEL J. HICKS

The United States and much of the world appears to be headed for an economic downturn. For those of us in Indiana, evidence about the depth of a downturn is mixed. We have a high share of manufacturing, which will be heavily affected by higher interest rates. This makes it more likely our recession will be worse than the national average. However, manufacturing employment is now a smaller and less important part of the state and national economies than it was in 1981 when we last went through this type of downturn.

The nation began the 1981 recession with an unemployment rate of 7.2 percent. We are today sitting at 3.5 percent, and businesses will be reluctant to cut employment given their recent experience with tight labor markets. However, the big lesson of a downturn is really how little control anyone has on short-term macroeconomic conditions. That should occasion us to think a bit more intelligently about the long term, where public policy and individual decisions will have influence.

It is election season, so we are unlikely to hear much substantive reflection on the long-term state of affairs in our state. Still, I would hope that there are serious thoughts about the many ways state and local government, businesses and households can adjust their temporal window of concern. We should be thinking about Indiana's economy in, say, 2030 or 2040 instead of dreading 2023.

One way to begin that thinking is by listening to the aspirations of Hoosiers. When I give talks around the state, I like to ask people, what would you like to see in your local economy over the next 20 to 30 years? The answer is always the same. Folks want to see steady population and job growth, increased prosperity, and a chance for young people to build wealth through home

There is always interest in schools being a centerpiece of the community, and people my age express some hope their children could find a way back to live nearby. I often hear talk of better institutions, from local government — schools especially but also congregations, civic clubs and the like. There is clear frustration that national politics has poisoned the frank and pragmatic discussions we need to have locally. I also hear a lot about bad roads, crumbling infrastructure, the lack Michael J. Hicks of public services and general underinvestment. These are all worries about economic growth.

There's a lot I don't hear. Few folks in Indiana lament the shortage of beaches or mountains in Indiana. I'm usually the only one complaining about the cold, but then I spent most of my life in the South. When I ask about local concerns. I don't hear about crime or immigration, which books are in the school library or which pronouns we use. I also don't hear folks complain about taxes. None of these issues have come up in the more than a decade I've been traveling around the state.

My anecdotal evidence of people's concerns are useful only because I speak to non-partisan groups. When I've attended political events, I hear a very different set of concerns that are almost a caricature of the facts. I try to stay away from these because there's so little to learn from a political event.

I note this experience because the concerns I hear about are all longterm issues that affect the lives of residents, and more importantly the lives of their children and grandchildren. One way to think more wholesomely about the long-term economy is to view economic growth the way economists do in writing and technical research. It is so very different from what you hear about the politics of

For most of the past century, economists have used mathematical models to explain the growth of an economy. The model is that growth (e.g., change in incomes or GDP) is a function of people, capital investment (land or factories), human capital and technology. We could simplify it a bit by dividing everything by the number of people. So per capita income is a function of the capital per person, human capital per person and technology per person. We could do this at a county or state level or between nations. We can do it in a single period, say, 2010 through 2020, or we could look at data over decades or even centuries. The findings of this research are him at mhicks@bsu.edu pretty compelling. My interpretation of the many dozens of studies I've read on this matter, and some I've authored, help me think about the future in a more focused way. These are what the statistical models of several centuries say.

Before the Industrial Revolution, arable land really, really mattered. During most of the industrial revolution, capital investment in factories and farming really mattered. People mattered too, but people migrated like wildfire to economic opportunity. So, if you had land and capital, you could find people.

Sometime in the middle of the 19th century, technology began to really matter. Fortunately, that technology centered mostly around manufacturing cities like Detroit or Boston. Technology still matters, but sometime in the middle of the 20th century, human capital really began to influence growth. Human capital is hard to measure, but increasingly we find that the years of education per adult really explain growth. During the 20th century, technology started to move away from manufacturing cities to places where lots of highly educated workers lived. Think of Detroit in 1920 versus Cupertino in 1990.

By the 1990s, capital began to matter far less, and indeed by the 21st century, studies began to report that in the developed world, nearly all the growth and prosperity between regions was attributable to human capital. This isn't really a surprising result when one considers the goods and services people are now consuming, how they are produced and the extraordinarily free flow of capital across the developed world.

These findings should prompt Hoosiers to ask their leaders where they stand on these issues. Do they think future growth will primarily come from large capital investments in the state, or from the human capital of our people? If they say growth is about capital investment, they are mistaken and we need different, better-educated leaders. If they say the future is about human capital, we need to ask why the state is in the midst of an historical disinvestment in people.

Lloyd chosen as regional director

An organization that provides support for small businesses has a new leader.

East Central Indiana Small Business Development Center recently named Karen Lloyd as its new regional director. She started in the role Oct. 3.

Lloyd takes over the role after serving as a business advisor for the organization. She previously worked for Ball State University as the coordinator for its Entrepreneurship Center Program.

"Karen brings a refreshing point of view to the director role and a remarkable ability to ask the right questions to aspiring entrepreneurs," said former director Peggy Cenova, who recently retired, in a press release. "Karen's knowledge of systems, her strategic mindset, and her strong sense of keeping clients' needs first will guarantee the continued success of the Clean energy jobs increase

By CASEY SMITH Indiana Capital Chronicle

indianacapitalchronicle.com

Clean energy businesses in Indiana added more than 5.600 jobs last year. according to a new report released

That's after Indiana lost nearly 3% of its clean energy workforce in 2020, mostly due to the COVID-19 pandemic.

The annual Clean Jobs Midwest report — compiled by Environmental Entrepreneurs, a green business advocacy group — shows more than 86,215 Hoosiers working a clean energy job in

The new data indicates a nearly 7% jump in clean energy jobs across Indiana compared to 2020. The jobs are in sectors like energy efficiency, construction, transportation, renewables and clean fuels.

In 2021, clean energy jobs grew more than two times faster than the state's of 86,215 jobs. More than twice as many Hoosiers worked in clean energy than the number of lawvers, accountants and auditors, web developers, and real estate agents in the state combined, according to the report.

Much of the growth was driven by the advanced transportation sector, which includes manufacturing of hybrid and electric cars, according to the report. As more automakers and their suppliers continue to shift to electric vehicles, the advanced transportation sector saw an increase of 25% in Indiana.

That translates to more than 4,150 new jobs added in the last year. Now, some 21,078 workers statewide are reported in the sector.

The Clean Jobs report noted that small businesses also largely drive Indiana's clean energy sector. In 2021, 69% of the state's clean energy businesses employed fewer than 20 individuals.

Some players talk about a squeeze as if it were as much beyond their comprehension as, say, the theory of relativity. Actually, a squeeze is usually an uncomplicated play requiring three basic elements to make it work. These are:

Declarer must have all the remaining tricks but one.
 He must have communication between his own hand and dummy when the squeeze card is played. 3. One defender must have to guard at least two suits.

So in today's deal, Element No.1 is met after West cashes two spades.

Element No.3 is met because only East can guard against declarer's holdings in hearts and clubs.

Declarer now has 10 of the remaining 11 tricks.

Element No.2 is met because there are entries to both the North and South hands.

Now let's see how the squeeze operates. Assume West shifts to a club at trick three, won with dummy's king. South draws two rounds of trump, then cashes the ace of clubs, an important part of the process. Declarer next plays three more trumps, discarding a club from dummy. This leaves dummy with the A-K-Q-7 of hearts while South has the 9-3 of hearts and J-9 of clubs. But observe what has hap-pened to East in the meantime. On the last trump lead, he must choose a discard from the J-8-5-4 of hearts and the queen of clubs. A heart discard establishes dummy's last heart; a club discard establishes South's J-9 of clubs. Either way, East must succumb. Note that the squeeze would fail if declarer did not first cash the ace of clubs before running his trumps. In that case, dummy's high club would block the suit and nullify the pressure exerted on East by South's jack. Element No.2 — two-way maneuverability at the critical point — would be lacking.

Contract By Steve Becker

Famous Hand

Opening lead — eight of hearts.

This deal occurred in the U.S. Great Britain final at the 1987 world team championship. The British gained heavily when their declarer brought in a tricky vulnerable game, while his American counterpart at the other table failed in the same contract.

At both tables, West led his singleton heart against four spades Both declarers put up the ace and led a club, and both Easts rose with the ace and returned a low heart. It was here that the play diverged. The American declarer ruffed the heart return with the spade eight and was overruffed by the ten. West shifted to a diamond, taken by South, who ruffed a club in dummy, Declarer now led the nine of spades to his queen and ruffed his last club, but was then left with a Hobson's choice: He could either fatally shorten himself in the trump suit by ruffing a heart, or lead a diamond. In practice, he tried to reach his hand with a diamond, and East ruffed for down one.

At the other table, Bob Sheehan, the English declarer, refused to ruff East's heart return at trick three, discarding a low club instead. Sheehan no doubt reasoned that this was a trick he could afford to lose regardless of how the hearts were divided, and it offered the addi-tional advantage of allowing him to keep his trumps intact.

West ruffed the heart with the ten and returned a diamond, but Sheehan was now in full control. He won the diamond with the ten, ruffed his last club and played the king of trump from dummy.

East could take his ace whenever he pleased, but the contract was home, declarer losing tricks only to the ten and ace of spades and the ace of clubs. The 720 points gained gave the British a 12-IMP pickup

Anna upends Indians

Fort Recovery falls in home finale

FORT RECOVERY The Indians were hoping to head into the playoffs on a winning streak.

Those ideas were blown up Friday night.

The Anna Rockets built a 22-point lead and held off the Fort Recovery High School's comeback attempt as they handed the Tribe a 35-20 defeat.

The Indians (3-6, 2-5 Midwest Athletic Conference), who were coming off of a 33-7 victory over Parkway, gave up a touchdown in the first two minutes Friday and were never able to claim a lead. Zach Osborn's 2-yard TD run at the 10:46 mark of the first quarter put Anna up for good and it pushed out to a 28-6 advantage when Caleb Kenton caught a 2-yard scoring pass from Alex Shappie with about five minutes left in the third quarter.

Cale Rammel found Troy Homan for a 41-yard touchdown pass and then ran in for an 18-yard score to pull Fort Recovery within eight points with 7:02 to play. But Anna responded with a seven-play, 58-yard scoring drive that was emphatically capped with a 42-yard Justin Richards

The Commercial Review MONROEVILLE — Going on the road to play the No. 2 team in the conference was going to be a difficult task regardless of the circumstances.

Jay County had to do it Friday without two key players. And then they lost another starter early in the game.

The result was an overmatched Jay County High School football team struggling to find offense or slow down the host Heritage Patriots in a 42-7 loss.

It was the squad's sixth straight loss.

JCHS played the game without leading rusher Kadin Ridenour and No. 3 tackler Bryce Wenk ference penalty. And when they

No. 2 tackler Brady Davis to an injury early in the first quarter.

It was an uphill battle from the start as the first drive for JCHS (2-7, 1-5 Allen County Athletic Conference) featured three negative plays and two incompletions. They gained a first down, but only by way of a pass inter-because of injuries. It also lost set up to punt, the snap went sailing over the head of Sheldon Minch leading to a 27-yard loss and a turnover on downs.

It took Heritage (6-3, 5-1 ACAC), which finished second in the conference to Class 1A No. 2 Adams Central, just two plays to reach the end zone on a 10-yard run by Isaac Nagy.
